U. S., Britain Present Stiffening Front to Soviet's Berlin Push

40 Russians Barred From Rail Offices; Note Asks Armed Guards Be Removed

Berlin, April 3 (AP).—Britain and the United States presented a stiffening front to Soviet pressure today and the Americans made two power moves of their own in the contest for Berlin.

American military police who surrounded the Soviet railway administration building in the United States sector blocked about 40 Russians from entering the offices where the Soviet zone rail network is directed.

Tonight the Americans in a note requested the Russians to take "immediate steps" to remove their armed guards from inside the building.

Then they set up a road control point where Soviet officers motor from their homes in Potsdam to their offices in downtown Berlin and for four hours subjected Russian traffic to inspection.

Not to Be Bullied

The British, through deputy military governor, Maj. Gen. Nevil C. D. Brownjohn, bluntly declared "We will show the Russians that we are not going to be bullied."

"It is quite clear," he told a news conference, "the Russians do not like our being in Berlin and

'Nervous' Americans Can Leave, Clay Says

Berlin, April 3 (U.P.).—General Clay, American commander in chief, said today "any American who is nervous" can leave Berlin.

"I don't want anyone to feel he is being held here," Clay said. "I also told my staff nobody will be ordered out. Any American who is nervous, we will be very glad to send out entirely on a voluntary basis at Government expense.

Clay said his offer was the second since the Russians walked out of the four-power control council here in March.

The first offer was made following the walkout, but "I had no takers."

"My purpose in doing this is psychological," he said. "I want Americans to know they can get out of here if they wish. If they think they are stuck here they will get claustrophobia."

Norway's Envoy Returning Home For Brief Visit

Norwegian Ambassador Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne last night confirmed reports that he will return to Oslo "for a short visit" but denied conjecture that the trip has political implication.

"It is true that I am going home for a short visit," he told The Washington Post. "But I'll be back in a week or two . . . it is only a trip to Norway such as I have been making every so often."

Early reports yesterday hinted that the return might be connected with a recent speech in which he voiced what observers have construed as strongly anti-Russian sentiments.

He will leave Monday, he said. Mrs. Morgenstierne and their two daughters will remain here.

Meanwhile, the State Department said that for "very serious" reasons it has demanded recall by their governments of two Czechoslovak diplomats and a Romanian Embassy chauffeur. The department would not say what the reasons were. It said merely that the three men from behind the iron curtain are "persona non grata"—unacceptable to this government.

Dr. Morgenstierne told Lovett that he will return to Washington after his consultations with superiors in Oslo.

Finns Decide What Answer To Give Soviet

President Stipulated Freedom of Action In Original Draft

Helsinki, Finland, April 3 (AP).—Finland's leaders decided today, after a week of deliberation, on their answer to the security pact requested by the Soviet Union to complete its chain of alliances from the Black Sea to the Arctic.

The cabinet met with President Juho Paasikivi at the presidential palace in what was described by responsible sources as a decisive session.

An official statement said additional instructions were approved which will be sent to the Moscow delegation that has received a Soviet draft of a proposed friendship

Strike Threat Cancels Finnish Army Leaves

Helsinki, Finland, April 3 (U.P.).—Gen. Aarne Sihvo, commander in chief of the Finnish army, said tonight that all army leaves are being suspended because there are not enough recruits to fill the gaps in Finland's armed forces.

Competent observers said they have learned the Communists intend to call strikes and mass meetings to force Finland to accept Russian terms.

Sihvo said his decision to cancel leaves was taken without consulting President Juho Paasikivi but that Minister of Defense Yrjoe Kallinen had been asked for approval.

He admitted guards are being increased around munition stockpiles in order to prevent "burglaries and damage by spring fires."

Sees Worst Danger Here

Isacson, Denied Paris Passport, Would Aid Jews in Palestine

New York, April 3 (AP).—Representalve Iscason of New York, refused a passport to attend an international conference in Paris, said tonight he will ask the State Department for permission to go to Palestine.

The American labor party Congressman said the Departmen's refusal to allow him to attend the Paris parley on aid to Greece demonstrated that "this country is in danger not from abroad, but right here at home."

Speaking at a founding meeting of the New York State Wallace-for-President Committee, Isacson said:

"As long as I can't go to Paris, I'm putting in a new application to go to Palestine, and I defy the State Department to say that going to Palestine and helping the Jews who are trying to set up a state, is against the interests of the United States."

The State Department announced last night it had turned down Isacson's passport request on grounds that his attendance at the Paris meeting was not in the interests of he U. S. Government.

The State Department said the Paris gathering would bring together members of committees organized in "most eastern European countries" to supply material and morale aid to Greek guerilla forces. Isacson said he planned to attend the meeting as an observer for the American Council for Aid to Democratic Greece."

The Bronx Congressman, recently elected in a by-election with the support of third-party presidential aspirant Henry A. Wallace, said he had wanted to attend the Paris conference to "learn the truth" about conditons in Greece.

Peace Hopes Of Marshall Seen Rising

Chile's Bogota Chief Gives Impressions Of 45-Minute Talk

By Mac R. Johnson

Bogata, Colombia, April 3 (NYHT).—Secretary of State George C. Marshall is optimistic over the possibility of avoiding a third world war, it was reported today.

Dr. Juvenal Hernandez, Chile's chief delegate to the Ninth International Conference of American States, told reporters this was his main impression after a 45-minute private talk with Marshall.

The Chilean said he got the idea Marshall believes a peace formula can be worked out with Russ and the world crisis can be resolved.

Cheered by ERP News

Marshall apparently had been greatly cheered by the news from Washington that the European Recovery Program had been passed by Congress and signed by President Truman.

"I am very much pleased to see how rapidly the European Recovery Plan was brought to a favorable conclusion," Marshall said after his talk with Hernandez.

"The action of Congress in this matter was of tremendous importance to the entire world," he declared.

The possibility of strengthening the anti-Communist stand of the inter-American States against Russia had first consideration in the Marshall-Hernandez conversations.

"Dr. Hernandez discussed the question of a resolution regarding subversive activities and the form it would take, but no conclusions were reached," Marshall said.

Dr. Hernandez said: "Our talks concerned the relations between the actual situation in the world and the western hemisphere; the dangers which menace our continents; the need for positively reaffirming in our countries a definite Democratic feeling; the urgency of establishing effective measures to defend and assure the political stability of each country and defense of the continent in the face of subversive activities that want to undermine it."

Financial Aid Discussed

He said they discussed in detail how Latin-American countries could receive financial help.

He quoted Marshall as saying his speech had been misinterpreted in that people generally felt he had slammed the door on aiding Latin-American countries, whereas he had only told them that large-scale

Foreign Aid Bill Signed By Truman

Gigantic European Recovery Program Starts Monday on Speed-up Schedule

By The Associated Press

With a speed almost unknown in peacetime, President Truman signed the six-billion-dollar, stop-Russia foreign aid bill into law yesterday less than 24 hours after Congress rushed it through final passage.

"This measure," he told the world in a statement, "is America's answer to the challenge facing the free world today."

Thus after 10 months of argument, the United States finally embarked shortly after noon on the unprecedented Marshall Plan for European recovery—this Nation's biggest helping-hand operation since wartime lend-lease. Russia is pledged to wreck the whole thing if she can and diplomats expect rough Soviet counter action.

The gigantic task of shoring up western Europe, the Middle East and China against Russian communism will start Monday morning on a high-speed emergency schedule. The State Department presumably will be in charge at the start until the regular organization is set up.

Five nations stand to benefit from the very first expenditures, officials said. They are Italy, France, Austria, Greece and the Netherlands, where the need is great and the dollar supply low. First shipments to them under the new law probably will be food, fuel and some industrial raw materials.

In the conflict between Russia and the Western powers, Italy's situation is considered the most critical at the moment.

Again Ask U. N. Entry

A direct move to counter Communist influence there was made in another quarter yesterday. The United States, Britain and France joined in asking the United Nations Security Council to reopen Italy's application for U. N. membership. Since Russia once blocked this, the move puts the Russians and their Communist associates on the spot.

The aid bill became law two weeks before the April 18 Italian elections and it seemed a fair bet that ships laden with American aid would be started for Italy—if they do not actually show up in port there—before the ballots are cast.

The $6,098,000,000 bill which Mr. Truman signed into law at a White House ceremony yesterday was rushed through its final stages largely because of the imminence of the Italian elections.

Those present at the ceremony in the President's office included Treasury Secretary Snyder, Interior Secretary Krug, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson and Undersecretary of State Lovett.

Secretary of State Marshall—who first proposed in a speech last June that the United States would help the nations of Europe if they would help themselves—is attending the Inter-American Conference at Bogota, Colombia. But he radioed a message which the White House released, saying:

Action on Draft and UMT Rushed by Senate Committee

By The Associated Press

Spurred by Russia's fast-breaking moves, the Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday gave itself less than a week to decide what to do about universal military training and reviving the draft.

When the committee wound up three weeks of public hearings yesterday Chairman Gurney (R. S. Dak.), told reporters he hoped his group can send legislation to the Senate by next Friday. Committee sessions behind locked doors will start Tuesday.

Gurney declined to forecast just how far the committee will go in meeting the Administration request for both UMT and the draft in the preparedness drive. But the North Dakota Senator had said previously that at least 10 of the 13 committee members favored the proposed program in principle.

As the committee closed its hearings, Secretary of Defenes Forrestal wrote Gurney that he does not wish "to foreclose the possibility" that he later might ask Congress to authorize a 70-group air force. But, Forrestal added, "I do not think it yet advisable" to go beyond the 55-group force called for in the new preparedness program.

When he testified before the committee last week, Forrestal made a rough guess it would cost 18 billion dollars—on top of the 11 billion dollars already in the budget for defense—to build the new Air Force to 70 groups.

Forrestal's letter stressed his belief that America's total military force must be well balanced. He indicated an extra 229,000 men would be required in all the services to support 70 Air Force groups. That would be in addition to the 220,000 the services are counting on from the proposed draft.

Testimony at the committee's final session yesterday was mainly in opposition to UMT. Here's a summary:

1. Historian Charles A. Beard said in a statement read to the committee for him that UMT would create "a monstrous military bureaucracy."

2. Prof. Lloyd H. Reyerson of the Universiyt of Minnesota said UMT "betrays the fact that those in control have not yet grasped the significance of scientific warfare."

3. Col. Truman Smith, retired, formerly of the Army's general staff, indorsed the proposed draft. But he added that UMT "may prove a most serious weakness in that defense funds and energies will be diverted to it from our first line of defense forces."

Atomic scientist Henry D. Smyth took no definite stand on UMT or the draft. But he said there is an "extreme shortage" of young scientists and urged creation of an auxiliary scientific corps. Smyth is the author of the Army's report on the atomic bomb.

Judge Orders Miners to Work; Injunction Directs Operators To Bargain on Pension Fund

Truman Requests Writ After Board Says Lewis Letter 'Induced' Walkout

A Federal Judge last night issued a temporary restraining order against the United Mine Workers union, telling its officers to end the 20-day soft coal strike.

The order, to be in effect until April 13, was signed by Federal District Judge Matthew McGuire at his apartment at 7:30 p.m. It was requested by the Department of Justice, acting on Presidential direction.

The order was double-barrelled. On the one hand it ran against the union, its officers and agents, and also "all persons in active concert and participation with them." They were "restrained pending furthe rorder of this court from continuing the strike now in existence."

Operators Told to Bargain

On the other hand, it also named as defendants all the signers of last year's operator-union contract, and ordered them to engage at once in free collective bargaining to settle the dispute.

Judge McGuire set a hearing for April 12 to decide whether the temporary order should be converted into a full-scale 80-day injunction under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The order was the climax of a day full of action. The developments, in chronological order:

1. Union President John L. Lewis issued a letter about 11 a. m. to all union members in which he disclaimed all responsibility for the stoppage. He told the miners they were acting on their own initiative and that it was up to them, not him, whether they stayed away from their jobs.

2. Just before noon, President Truman issued instructions to Attorney General Tom C. Clark to seek an injunction against the strike.

3. At the same time he made public the report of his three-man board of inquiry. It said Lewis caused the strike by a letter of March 12 to the miners. It called that letter "independent action" which Lewis warned, in earlier communications, that he felt free to take.

Stay May Be Asked

Last night's order was issued only on a one-sided complaint, from the Government. It was based on affidavits of high Federal officials. Lewis and his union, therefore, may go to court, perhaps on Monday, and demand a stay of its execution. It will be up to the court to decide what ot do next.

But if the court keeps the order in effect, to apply at once, the miners must return to the pits or

Writ May Be Defied, UMW Official Says

Revised Draft Due Tuesday

Sights Are Set for May 1 Vote On D. C. Home Rule Measure

The author of the District home rule plan yesterday set his sights on May 1 as the target date for a House vote—and approval—on local suffrage.

Representative James C. Auchincloss (R., N. J.) said a "clean" draft of his revised bill to reorganize the District government was being prepared by legislative counsel and would be completed Tuesday.

The revision is the result of joint Senate-House subcommittee hearings on the original Auchincloss bill, held early in September. It is expected that the new draft will take care of some major objections against the bill expressed by home rule proponents at the hearings.

To Offer Bill April 12

Auchincloss plans to toss the new bill into the legislative hopper on April 12, at which time it will automatically be referred to the House District Committee.

Because of the long hearings held on home rule by the Auchincloss subcommittee, the full House District Committee is expected to clear the legislation by April 14 or 15, according to Auchincloss.

The next step will be to get the bill through the House Rules Committee, which screens and sets up the order for bills to come out on the floor for discussion and vote. The Rules Committee will be urged by Auchincloss to expedite the measure.

On the basis of the tentative schedule, Auchincloss believes he can obtain approval for local suffrage by May 1.

At that point, it will be up to Senator Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.) to take over guidance of the bill through the Senate. He is chairman of the Senate home rule subcommittee. Auchincloss said yesterday he would confer with Ball to obtain agreement on the revised bill.

The home rule bill in its present form would give Washington an elected city council—replacing the three Commissioners, who are appointed by the President. The council would appoint a city manager. District government activities would be reorganized and centralized in 14 major departments. Local legislation proposed by the council would be subject to veto by either house of Congress or by the President.

The bill would give Washingtonians their first local vote since 1873. The measure does not propose national representation for the District.

For Life's Records

Montana To Number Its Babies

Helena, Mont., April 3 (AP).—Starting next January, Montana will assign a serial number to each baby born, and he'll have it the rest of his life. The State registrar of vital statistics, L. I. Benepe, says all the States will put the plan into operation eventually.

That one number, he said, will be the person's number for Social Security, military registration, police identification, and all other identification purposes. It will be discarded when he dies.

Benepe said the plan is to be directed by the vital statistics office of the United States Public Health Service in Washington.

Benepe said Montana would assign the numbers this way:

All United States citizens' serial numbers will start with 1. Montana has been assigned No. 25. Thus a Montanan's number will start with 125, followed by a dash and two numbers indicating the year of birth.

After a second dash will come the numbers indicating the county of birth to be followed by the numerical order in which the baby was born in that county.

Benepe says Canada already has the system.

Rhapsodic Prose

Canal Route Report Packs Lots of Lure

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

When a high Government official bursts into rhapsodic prose in the middle of a routine report to Congress, then the flowers that bloom in the spring, tra-la, must have something to do with the case.

In this case it was a report from Undersecretary of Interior Oscar L. Chapman to the House Public Lands Committee regarding a proposed survey of the old Chesapeake & Ohio Canal route with the view of building a scenic parkway between Great Falls and Cumberland, Md. The canal route paralels the Potomac on the Maryland side of the river.

Report Embellished

The Undersecretary formally notified the committee that his department was all for the idea. Then, casting aside the stiff language required by parliamentary protocol, Chapman grew lyrical:

"The area along the canal in springtime, when dogwood, laurel, rhododendron and other beautiful flora is (sic) in bloom, is transformed into a veritable garden.

"The Potomac, with its many picturesque rapids and lake-like pools walled in by wooded mountainsides, constitutes a scenic wonderland now hidden from the eyes of millions of Americans who could enjoy its inspirational beauty if it were opened to their view . . ."

Dream of Washington

George Washington, in the days following the Revolution, had dreamed of opening a Potomac route to the West. The C. & O. Canal, begun at Georgetown in 1828 was completed to Cumberland, Md., in 1850. It was kept in operation, chiefly for the transportation of coal, until 1924, when flood damage and the trend of the Student Held For Changing School Records

Howard University Law Pupil Accused Of 'Grade' Racket

A Howard University law student was charged by police yesterday with collecting thousands of dollars for "raising" students' grades and otherwise changing university records.

Nine or more accomplices working in three university offices have been "fixing" students' record cards, according to investigators.

Students were charged from $150 to $500 for uplifting grades, depending on how low the actual grades were and how high they wanted them, police said. Advance copies of exams were allegedly obtained for $15 to $75, according to Detective Sergt. John Apostolides of the check and fraud squad.

The student accused of heading the "grades racketeers" is Carl Prince, 21, a veteran who lives on the campus. University authorities said they did not know who his accomplices were yet.

Frederick D. Wilkinson, university registrar, told The Washington Post he had no idea how successful the group has been, pending further investigation by university and police officials, but he

Move to Exhibit German Art Over Nation Gains Momentum

A move to send the famed German art collection on a tour of the United States gained momentum in Congress yesterday, as a record weekday throng of 32,915 visited the National Gallery of Art to see the 202 works of masters.

The art treasure, worth 80 million dollars, was recovered by the Army from a German salt mine and brought to this country. However, the State Department has decided, after a brief exhibition here, the paintings will be returned to Germany around the end of this month.

The spectacular collection immediately captured the imagination of both Washington area residents and visitors from all over the country. A total of 341,048 persons have visited the exhibit halls at the gallery since the showing opened 18 days ago.

One of yesterday's visitors—Screen and Film Star Ongrid Bergman—drew as much interest and attention as the combined exhibits. Scores of sightseers turned from the paintings to the modern Maid of Orleans as she was recognized again and again during her three-tour.

Gallery officials said that Miss Bergman has been a frequent visitor, especially when she was playing the lead role in "Joan of Lorraine" here over a year ago.

Another picture viewer yesterday was Senator Theodore F. Green (D., R. I.), an art connoisseur at 81 and Congress' most frequent visitor to the Gallery.

Erik Reger, a Berlin editor on a tour of the United States, last week suggested that instead of returning the paintings right away, they be sent on a tour of the United States as a goodwill gesture. Reger proposed that a group of art curators be brought here

Belgian Regent Due Here Today For State Visit

By the United Press

Prince Regent Charles and Prime Minister Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium will fly here today for a 10-day state visit, the primary purpose of which is t oget United States support for the new anti-Communist pact signed at Brussels.

The Prince Regent comes at the invitation of President Truman. The Prime Minister and Paul De Groote, Belgian minister of economic coordination, joined the party to enlist American support for the European defense agreement.

The Belgian party is scheduled to arrive at the Air Transport Command Terminal at mid-morning in a Belgian Sabena airliner. The plane left Brussels about noon EST yesterday.

While the Prince Regent fills a busy schedule of official functions, Spaak and De Groote are expected to do the spade work on the Brussels pact. They will see Acting Secretary of State Robert A. Lovett at 10 a. m. Monday and sometime during the week will confer with President Truman.

Mrs. Peter Lindstrom is a Scandinavian beauty who has won the admiration of America's women, the toasts of its men and the despair of its cosmetologists.

INGRID BERGMAN

To Ingrid Bergman—as you know her—a beauty shop is only a place for a shampoo. Lipstick is an unnecessary item often forgotten. Makeup is a synthetic required only because cameras can't catch the fresh loveliness.

Cosmetologists wish they could produce such results.

All this—ability and sincerity, too—was in Washington yesterday to receive an award from the Women's National Press Club and to pull hundreds of eyes away from the fabulous German art collection at the National Gallery.

Ingrid Bergman, the daughter of a Stockholm photo equipment dealer, bounded from a success in a school play to Sweden's stages at 15.

At 24, she had been an actress six years, four of them in Swedish films. Her success in the Swedish version of Intermezzo brought her to America in 1939—all but unnoticed.

Her fears then were that her accent would jeopardize her American hopes.

But with rising success in each portrayal, she was an English-Hungarian pianist, an English gentlewoman who refused to be driven insane; a ravishing Creole; a Spanish peasant; the daughter of a German Nazi; a nun and a French martyr.

For standing pat with her sanity in Gaslight, she won Hollywood's Academy Award in 1944. Other honors fell in line, among them the "Outstanding Actress of 1945" for her Joan of Lorraine.

No tarnish to her glamor, but rather an attribute to her charm, is her motherhood. Married to a Swedish medical student early in her career, her marriage and their daughter, Pia, comprise her greatest success.

Soon after her arrival in America, she vowed:

"If I ever become famous in Hollywood I will not forget my husband in Stockholm. My husband knows I would come back to him.

"He is a very clever man."

Some Aspects of Tug-of-War In Berlin Like Comic Opera

Berlin, April 4 (U.P.).—Despite grave implications, some aspects of the Soviet-American proceedings in Berlin yesterday had the air of a comic opera.

Sixty armed American guards had blockaded the Soviet Railway headquarters building which happens to be in the United States zone. Eight Russians, including Gen. I. Petroff, railroad chief of the Soviet zone, were holding out inside the building. If they left they wouldn't be allowed to return. Food and vodka were sent into them today. Two Russian generals and at least 21 other Russians tried to enter but were stopped by American military police.

Reason for the United States blockade was the Russian insistence on keeping armed Soviet troops inside the building.

Put Food on Sidewalk

At 8:45 a. m. a Russian captain accompanied by two armed guards and a driver brought food for the Russians in the building.

Lieut. Col. Eugene W. Hilton of Los Angeles, Calif., told them through an interpreter to put the food on the sidewalk and German policemen would carry it in.

The Russians agreed, and the food, two large tins of soup and a kettle of coffee, were sent in. The Russians drove away without comment.

At 9 a. m. a bus carrying 20 Russians, led by two lieutenant colonels, arrived. Aboard were 15 military personnel, including six officers, four women and one man in civilian clothes.

The Russian colonel said they were administrative officers and wanted to go upstairs to work.

"General Clay's instructions are that all who wish to leave may do so. But they will not be permitted to return," Colonel Hilton said.

All Very Polite

The Russians looked Hilton squarely in the eye for several seconds, then walked bcak to the bus and drove off.

All conversations were conducted in polite tones.

A few moments later, two Russian generals arrived. They stepped briskly from their car and, looking neither to the left or the right, marched to the front door of the building.

There, three American M.P.'s stood at smart attention.

The only way the generals could have passed would have been to shove them aside.

They stopped, glared at the guards, then abruptly about-faced and marched back to their car.

Guards Examine Packages

Shortly before 10 a. m., the Russian captain who brought food, returned with cigarets. American guards examined each package carefully then permitted a German policeman to carry them inside.

German workers leaned out of the windows and watched the proceedings.

Earlier, Capt. George Cassidy of Scoti, N. Y., was in charge of the guard and when he refused to pass a Russian officer, the officer smiled broadly and shook his hand.

At 11:30 a. m. more food was brought to the Russians.

Shortly after noon, three officers, two captains and a lieutenant arrived with a basket of food and vodka.

"That's for the general (Petroff)," they told American guards who inspected it.

At 1:20 a. m. today (Sunday) eight Russians left the building.

British Press Criticized for Berlin 'Alarm'

London, April 3 (U.P.)—A Foreign Office spokesman otday criticized the British press for "alarmist reports" on the Berlin situation and said "life in that city apparently is quite normal."

Following a telephone consultation with British officials in the former German capitol, the spokesmen told a press conference "the situation is extremely calm in Berlin."

He said "the only excitement there seems to be reading of alarmist reports in the British press our people there are extremely surprised at the general tenor of these reports."

"The situation continues to be one of inconvenience rather than crisis," he said, adding:

"The four-power kommnadatura is still functioning. While the Soviet announced their unwillingness to participate in six kommandatura committees there, the committees are not related to the immediate operation of running the city.

"Committees dealing with food, fuel, power and public utilities, etc., are still functioning. There has been no breakdown on four-power discussions on currency reform for Germany."

He said "there is no foundation for many of the sensational reports which have appeared."

they are trying to make our position untenable."

The British Foreign Office spokesman in London said, however, the situation "is not one which is incapable of solution."

The spokesman said the "situation is normal except for the temporary hold-up of some trains. Other trains are running and the road traffic to and from Berlin is continuing."

Continue Aerial Ferry

The Americans continued to fly their aerial supply and passenger service into Templehof Airdrome from Frankfurt. United States Air Force C-47 transports began taking off from Frankfurt early this morning and 32 made the run today.

The aerial ferry was continued although a 56-car American military freight train successfully tested the Soviet land blockade last night and reached Berlin with only the customary presentation of the train commander's documents showing the contents of the cars. The Russians did not insist upon making an inspection.

The British, who sent two military freights through the Soviet zone the same way, said Gen. Sir Brian Robertson's special passenger train with part of his staff aboard passed through the Soviet zone westward last night, also without incident.

This seemed to indicate the Russians were chiefly interested in controlling west-bound freight and east-bound passengres.

Travel Without Hindrance

British and American automobiles and trucks traveled without hindrance along the 112-mile autobahn linking this city behind the iron curtain with the western zones. English-speaking Russian guards checked passengers' documents as usual. They were quick in their checks and pleasant.

The 50 or more American military police who closed in on the block-square Soviet Reichsbahn building in the American sector last midnight maintained their siege throughout the day. The Russians were occupying the building, which they call their military railroad headquarters, when the British, Americans and French moved into Berlin nearly three years ago. The Russians never gave it up, although it is in the American sector.

There was speculation whether the British would take similar action against the broadcasting headquarters of powerful Radio Berlin. This station, although in the British sector, has been occupied by the Russians ever since they conquered the city and daily pours out Soviet propaganda. Today, as every day, a Russian guard was posted in the lobby with a tommygun.

Let 1100 Germans In

Armed with carbines and sidearms, American Military Police let German employes into the railroad building, and there were about 1100 there today. They let out all Russians who wished to leave, but they barred all Russians who attempted to enter.

Eight Russians—including a general, several other officers and armed guard personnel—staged a "sit in" in the building, however.

Among the 40 Russians who sought to enter and were turned away were a number of supervisory officials and about a dozen others who brought food for those remaining inside. All the food was inspected by the American guards before it was taken inside by German police. The Americans themselves could not enter the building because two Soviet guards with guns and bayonets stood just inside the entrance.

When the guards arrived, the Russians asked, "Are we being evicted?"

"If you leave you cannot get back," replied the colonel in charge. "You will have to judge for yourself. These are my orders."

"We don't want to starve them out," was an American's answer to why food was permitted to go in.

Guards Sent In After Dark

Col. Frank L. Howley, head of United States Military Government in Berlin, said the building was cordoned off because the Russians had been sending in guards there "after dark."

It was explained the United States could not permit Soviet armed guards to take over territory or buildings that are under American jurisdiction.

Howley said Gen. Alexander Kotikov, Russian commandant in Berlin, had protested. Kotikov was said to have explained the Soviet guards had been sent in because of reports that "criminal" elements were plotting to destroy records in the building.

Howley said Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American commander in Germany, would take Kotikov's protest under consideration "at the earliest opportunity."

He bluntly declared, "If there is any building in our sector that needs protection we feel we are adequate to do it without Russian help."

He said the telephone to the building had not been cut off and there were no plans to dislodge the Russians remaining inside.

"If they want to live and work there, it's all right with us," he said, but "we will not admit any other Russians until this thing is settled."

There was no explanation of the blockade of the Potsdam road that was established by an American officer, six soldiers and two German policemen at 11 a. m. close to the Soviet boundary.

It did not creat much excitement, as the Russians began diverting their traffic to other routes as soon as they got wind of it.

It appeared the American move was an outright counter to the establishment two days ago of temporary Soviet road blocks along the edge of their sector in Berlin.

Field Marshal Lord Montgomery, British chief of the imperial staff, arrived in Helle, today, to see Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, British commander in Germany. He was noncommittal about the Berlin crisis.

The anti-Communist newspaper Sozialdemokrat said provincial German police in Saxony had been alerted for several weeks to be ready to take over police duties in all Berlin.

Hold Night Air Maneuvers

Russian authorities sent information to U. S. Air Force officers last night that they were holding night meneuvers over the Soviet zone with a large number of fighter planes. They advised that American planes flying from Frankfurt be warned. The transports flying supplies in from Frankfurt made day trips, however, and none reported any interference.

U. S. officials said two German food trains had to be rerouted into Berlin from the West because the Russians reported "operational difficulties" in Thuringia. The Russians are reported preparing spring military maneuvers in Thuringia, a possible reason for the railway snarl.

U. S. Army headquarters at Frankfurt said the lack of passenger train service would not halt the sending of American families into Berlin. Twenty-seven women and children who arrived in Bremerhaven yesterday will be sent in by air.

Buenos Aires, April 3 (U.P.).—The Argentine government today granted Spain a $473,500,000 credit for the purchase of Argentine food stuffs.

61 Guerillas Slain in Salonika Area

Salonika, Greece, April 3 (AP).—Greek troops killed 61 Communist-led guerillas today in hand-to-hand fighting in the Crucia (Krussia) mountain area, American observers said. Forty-four rebels were wounded and two surrendered.

Greek army losses included one officer and eight soldiers killed and 20 soldiers wounded.

The fighting took place near Sokhos, 28 miles northeast of Salonika. Backed by artillery the Greek regulars cut up the encircled guerilla force.

In the early morning darkness two guerilla columns totaling 150 men escaped from the pocket.

In Salonika 73 persons including 12 women charged with being Communist spies went on trial before a military court.

Press dispatches said fierce fighting is continuing in northwestern Greece near the Albanian border. Greek army units were said to have captured five villages about 35 miles northwest of Ioannina, inflicting more than 150 casualties on the guerillas.

330,000 to Guard Italian Polls; Yugoslav Arsenal Ship Seized

Communist-Led Crowd Prevented Taking Guns Ashore

Rome, April 3.—The Italian government moved to guard the April 18 elections with 330,000 men as police today seized a ship which carried arms from Yugoslavia to Italy.

Police at Molfetta, in South Italy, said the seized ship contained 300 cases of submachine-guns and rifles, more than 10,000 hand grenades and huge quantities of rifle and small ammunition.

Led by Communist Mayor Matteo Altomare, a crowd tried to break through police lines guarding the ship and demanded that the arms be unloaded. Police broke up the demonstration. Police said the ship was loaded at Fiume, in Yugoslav territory. The cargo was listed as timber and terra cotta pots for Beirut, Lebanon.

The independent newspaper Il Giornale D'Italia headlined the ship incident: "Aid to Italy—from the United States, wheat and coal; from Yugoslavia, arms and ammunition."

The newspaper referred to American Ambassador James C. Dunn's speech at Taranto today in which he said the U. S. had sent Italy three million tons of coal and close to 900,000 tons of grain, fats, milk, fish and vegetables in the last seven months. Dunn spoke at a ceremony honoring arrival of the 500th American aid ship.

Interior Minister Mario Scelba said the government has equipped 150,000 men with the most modern armament and prepared them to meet force with force. The Army, Navy, Air Force and the police have contributed men to this huge shock group.

I naddition another 180,000 troops will be assigned to guard Italy's hundreds of voting places, Scelba said. There will be four men at each booth. Scelba told his fellow countrymen they must choose between communism and democracy and said:

"Do not fear ghosts which have been called to keep you away from the polls. Freedom to vote will be guaranteed."

Romans already are aware of some of the strength at the disposal of Premier Alcide de Gasperi's Cabinet. During the day approximately 25,000 members of the armed services gathered in Rome for the parade Sunday honoring the reactivation of the Sardinian Grenadiers Division.

Preelection disorders continued in southern Italy. Within the past 24 hours nine Communists, two Monarchists and a Socialist have been wounded by gunfire.

Police arrested 10 persons accused of belonging to the Arditi following the armed ambush near Naples of a car full of Communists. Among the nine wounded was Eugenio Reale, former Italian Ambassador to Poland. The Arditi is a Fascist group bent on political revenge.

Communists battled monarchists in the streets of Petrona in Calabria Province. Two monarchists were gravely wounded. Four persons were arrested.

At Sinopoli, near Reggio Calabria, Deputy Mayor Rocco Simonin, a Socialist, was shot and wounded. Leftist newspapers said a Christian Democrat did the shooting.

BLUEBLOODS OF DOGDOM—These champions at the National Capital Kennel Club Show in the National Guard Armory were just about the big and small of it. Pulaski's Masterpiece (left), a toy poodle from New York, is known privately as Stinky. Stinky's bored companion is Cappy, a Great Pyrenees, owned by Mrs. Quentin Stephenson of Hyattsville, Md. Cappy's official moniker is La Shen Le Senegal

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

CHALKING UP A SCHNAUZER—Helen L. Guth of Baltimore grooms Champion Winalesby Reital, a standard Schnauzer

Stinky was distinctly bored.

Except for an occasional walk, he just lolled on his cushion most of yesterday, regarding with complacency the 634 other dogs at the annual National Capital Kennel Club dog show at the National Guard Armory.

And why not? Stinky is Stinky only to his closest friends. To the judges and to most of the dog world he is Champion Pulaski's Masterpiece, C.D., C.D.X., distinguished silver-gray toy poodle of Poodles, Inc., New York City.

His owner, Count Alexis E. Pulaski, wouldn't take $5000 for Stinky, which earns $250 for Pulaski every time he is bred. His offspring have brought as much as $600 each.

So a dog show to thois 18-month-old champion is just another dog show.

All the yelping, all the strutting of the schnauzers, the Shetland sheepdogs, Welsh Corgis, Doberman Pinschers didn't raise a hair on Stinky's well-brushed stub of a tail.

It was even old stuff to pose for the cameras—this time with La Shan Le Senegal ("Cappy"), the hulking champion Great Pyrenees of Mrs. Quentin C. Stephenson of Hyattsville, Md.

Miss Lucy Copestake, Stinky's handler, was bored. (Only she and a few others can call him Stinky—privately—and get away with it.) Like all the exhibitors at the two-day show that closes tonight, Miss Copestake must sit by Stinky throughout, although the actual showing of a dog may consume less than an hour.

"What I should have brought is a good book," she complained.

For want of something better to do, she put Stinky through the paces that won his two degrees—Companion Dog and Companion Dog Excellent. This means he is proficient in obediance trials—like retrieving, heeling, jumping and "staying."

Back on his cushon, Stinky surveyed the noisy scene agan through drowsy eyes. There was Mrs. S. A. Blair of Gordonsvlle, Va., primping her two parti-color cocker spaniels—a dab of vaseline to make their noses shine, Murine to make their eyes sparkle, chalk to fluff up their hair, and endless brushng and combing.

Nearby, Miss Helen L. Guth of Baltimore, was fingering powdered chalk into the crinkly hair of her champion standard Schnauzer, "to make him look whiter."

"Isn't that cheating?" asked a reporter.

"Naw," said Miss Guth. "The judges know we do this."

Stinky heard all this, and he, too, knew it too well. His turn was coming soon, but it was nothing new. The champion's eyelids drooped and he was fast asleep.

DeValera Says Russia Is 'Bringing War'

New York, April 3 (AP).—Eamon de Valera, former Prime Minister of Eire, said today that the actions of Russia "are bringing war and making it inevitable."

At a farewell luncheon of the American-Irish reception committee, De Valera said, "We are dashing into World War III with sails full set. There is a dangerous condition in the world today."

"I cannot understand why Russia is acting as she is acting. It seems to me the actions of Russia are bringing war and making it inevitable."

Standard Man Hits Oil for Heating

Oklahoma City, April 3 (AP).—The president of Standard Oil Co. (Ohio) declared today one way to prevent future petroleum shortages was to discontinue the use of fuel oil for heating.

W. T. Holliday of Cleveland, estimated it would require considerable time for conversion but said it is necessary to conserve petroleum. He said petroleum should be kept for internal combustion units.

Raids on India Reds Bring Protest Strikes

Calcutta, India, April 3 (U.P.).—An estimated 15,000 workers struck against four Bombay textile mills today to protest nation-wide raids on Communist offices and 91 government employes started hunger strikes in Calcutta.

The strike by 4000 government workers here appeared to be on the wane, however.

Finns Decide Reply to Soviet and military agreement.

Delegates Return Today

Urho Kekkonen and J. O. Soederhjelm, the two delegates who returned here for the detailed discussions, will go back to Moscow on a Russian plane Sunday and take the new instructions with them.

The 78-year-old Paasikivi appeared very tired and strained after the lengthy consultations with cabinet, parliamentary party chairmen and personal advisers, informants said. The cabinet session was deferred until afternoon because he was too worn to receive the ministers in the morning.

Responsible sources said he had drafted a preliminary reply to Moscow in midweek, but never sent it.

His original reply was said to have agreed that Finland would defend her borders in the event of an attack directed against the Soviet Union, but that Finland would be free to determine when such an attack threatened and when military cooperation with the Russians should begin.

Communists Assail Parliament

Whether the final directive followed the same line could not be learned.

Earlier, most of the parliamentary groups were against any military agreement at all.

One of the main reasons for bringing the two delegates back from Moscow, it was reported, was to determine at first hand how far Finland could go in limiting the scope of the proposed military clauses.

A threatening Communist press campaign against the majority of Parliament which opposes military clauses continued. The Communist organ, Tyokansan Sanomat, declared "this rubbish element must be wiped out of history, at least in the next elections if not earlier."

Trieste Line Reinforced

Trieste, April 3 (U.P.).—Yugoslavs reinforced their road blocks today to a strength which authorities said could halt a medium tank and the Allies replied by building more check points and sending more armored cars out on patrol.

Virtually every highway leading into Yugoslavia or the Yugoslav zone of the Free State of Trieste has been reinforced with new barriers of rocks and logs. They have been added to the plain wooden gates and barbed wire which formerly choked the roads.

Each truck, cart or pedestrian must wind slowly around traps made of fresh walls of rocks and logs whether entering or leaving the Yugoslav domain. Authorities say the traps could halt a medium tank and above each block flies the flag of Yugoslavia.

On the Allied side, particularly in the British sector, more armored cars are seen on the streets, more control points have been erected to check identity papers and more troops are on "routine field exercises."

Along the waterfront, American and British warships are wedged in among tiny fishing and coastal vessels. At nightfall the Yugoslavs light up their frontier posts with red stars and their soldiers patrol the scrubby rocks and cliffs overlooking the city. The British and Americans also sweep their frontier area with lights, men and machines.

Reports, which were discounted by Allied authorities, said Italian army units were massing at Monfalcone, 15 miles north of here, in preparation for swift occupation of the city between April 15 and 19.

Trieste Communists scheduled a mass meeting for April 6, to coincide with the U. S. Army day parade.

Soviet Voted Down On War-Monger Tag

U. N. Press Parley Rejects Effort to Brand American Newspapers by Count of 27 to 5

Geneva, April 3 (NYHT).—A Soviet move to brand American newspapers as "war-mongers" was rejected today by the policy committee of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information.

The vote was 27 against 5 (the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukraine and Yugoslavia), and one abstention (A ghanistan).

Then the committee adopted six working clauses of an American resolution on press freedom principles. The only opposition came from the eastern Eurpean states.

Article 5 f the United States document provoked Gen. Wiktor Grosz of Poland.

Quoting from what he said was a New York Herald Tribune editorial, General Grosz announced: "I would call the situation in the Unted States a war hysteria."
eral,h eta oshr dcmfw vbg cmfw sh

American editors clearly have launched a campaign for "breaking down the resistance of the rank and file readers to war propaganda," he continued, saying the Herald Tribune editorial of March 21 had stated there "is the crying need of speed. The issue has become one of days, perhaps hours."

The six clauses adopted were:

1. That everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought and expression; to hold opinions without interference; and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas by any means and regardless of frontiers.

2. That the right of news personnel to have the widest possible access to sources of information, to travel unhampered in pursuit thereof, and to transmit copy without unreasonable or discriminatory limitations, should be guaranteed by action on the national and international plane.

3. That the exercise of these rights should be limited only by recognition of and respect for the rights of others, and protection afforded by law to the freedom, welfare and security of all;

4. That in order to prevent abuses of freedom of information, governments should support measures which will help to improve the quality of information and make a diversity of information to seek the truth and report the facts.

6. This moral obligation, under the spur of public opinion, can be advanced through individual news personnel.

In conference committee No. 2, a resolution was adopted calling upon American newspaper publishers to reduce their current newsprint orders by 50,000 tons to make the newsprint available to China, France and the Netherlands.

J. Murray Watson, the British delegate, said American consumption of newsprint and the dollar shortage throughout the world combined to "suppress justifiable news."

Harry Martin, the American delegate, replied that the United States imports the bulk of its newsprint and therefore has no control over its source.

Four Causes Of Crisis Seen

Philadelphia, April 3 (AP).—Three of the four major causes of the world crisis and threat to peace have nothing to do with the Soviet Union, James P. Warburg, New York economist and author, said tonight.

But present United States national policy, as stated by President Truman March 17, "rests upon the belief that the Soviet Union alone has caused and is causing the world crisis," Warburg continued.

The speaker named as the three primary causes of the world crisis:

1. A technological revolution which "has shrunk a world formerly divided by oceans, mountains and deserts into one world in which there can be neither peace nor prosperity for any people unless there is peace and prosperity for all."

2. "A socio-economic revolution, accelerated and sharpened by the destruction wrought by two great wars."

3. "The world's military, political and economic power to become concentrated in only two poles of super-power—the Soviet Union and the United States. This has destroyed the only mechanism of preventing armed conflict through a precarious balance of power."

Russian Church Approves Ideology of Communist State

Moscow, April 3 (NYHT).—The Moscow patriarchate has reconciled the differences between the spritual basis of the Russian Orthodox Church and the materialistic basis of the Soviet Communist state. It did so by declaring the materialistic basis of communism alien to the church, but at the same time accepting and approving the product of a materialistic ideology in the form of the Soviet state.

The patriarchate also upheld the Communist state in its current struggle against capitalist countries.

Ecclesiastical reasoning of a high order to reconcile the ideological differences between church and state was advanced in the current issue of the patrarchate Journal by Archbishop Lucas of the Crimea.

"What is our real attitude toward our (Soviet) government and our new state system?" he asked himself. He replied:

"First, we, the Russian clergy, live in full peace with our government. We have no reason for enmity toward the government because it gave the church full freedom and does not interfere in its internal affairs.

"Of course, we are completely alien to the materialism which constitutes the ideological basis of Communism, but this does not prevent us fron seeing all the good, full of social truth, that the new state gave us and we welcome it with a pure heart."

Lucas, a professor of surgery, distinguished himself in the war and received the Stalin Prize in 1945 for developing new methods of treating wounds.

Lucas referred to the Bible and history in urging American Christians to restrain the hand of their Government, which he charged was leading them and the rest of the world into war.

He cited the fate of Tamerlane, Alexander of Macedon, the Romans, Napoleon and the Nazis. He thought that a great number of Americans who know the Bible by heart would remember Nebuchadnezzar, Balthazar and the Assyrian army, which was exterminated when it tried to capture Jerusalem.

He addressed to "those few Americans who are hoarding dollars with trembling hands" the words of the Apostle Paul: "For the love of money is the root of all evil: which, while some coveted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows (I Timothy, vi:10).

Comunism is not identified with democracy, he asserted, only because communism goes beyond and includes democracy. He said the Russian Church is convinced that efforts to halt communism will fail.

Russians Test Aim Close to Korea Line

By Roy Roberts

At the 38th Parallel, Korea, April 3 (AP).—Russian troops are holding frequent target practices just north of this arbitrary boundary which divides Korea between Soviet and American occupation forces.

Villagers who live just south of the line in the American zone are afraid to venture near the border, defined by newly dug earthworks on the Soviet side.

North Koreans, in turn, appear so suspicious that one of them actually threw away an American cigarette which this correspondent laid on the line for him. A cigarette is an article of considerable black market value. In more than two years in Korea I never before had seen a Korean disdain one.

American troops at this outpost said 40 to 50 Soviet enlisted men usually marched to an area just and sub-machine-gun practice is American view by a ridge. Rifle north of the line but hidden from held in the mornings and mortars are fired in the afternoons, the Americans said.

Trenches have been dug on the Soviet side at intervals clear across juts out into the Yellow Sea. There this 25-mile-wide peninsula that are others across almost the breadth of Korea.

American officers say they would be of little if any value in modern warfare. There is no such work on the American side and no evidence of offensive or defensive preparations.

Elections Postponed Because of Eclipse

Seoul, Korea, April 3 (U.P.).—The United Nations Commission for Korea, bowing to age-old superstition, agreed today to postpone the south Korean elections for one day to prevent their falling on the same day as an eclipse of the sun.

The commission agreed to hold the elections on May 10 after Lieut. Gen. John R. Hodge, U. S. occupation commander, had pointed out that the eclipse would make May 9 a day of ill-omen for thousands of Koreans.

Membership Bid Due to Be Vetoed By Soviet Again

Lake Success, April 3 (AP).—The Western powers demanded again today the admission of Italy and Transjordan into the United Nations.

Both countries have been blocked twice by Soviet vetoes.

The three powers—the United States, France and Britain—indicated they want the membership issue settled immediately.

The demand came just two weeks after the three powers called for the return of Trieste to Italy and two weeks before the crucial Italian elections.

Moscow has not tipped its hand yet on the Trieste question. There was immediate speculation here that Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, would be guided on the Italian application by the Soviet reaction to the Trieste proposal.

He is expected to veto Transjordan a third time.

The Security Council and the Assembly must agree on a new member.

The three powers said they believe it appropriate to bring up the two applications at the Assembly's special session April 16.

That session was called to consider Palestine alone. But a two-thirds vote of the members can broaden the work calendar.

On October 1, 1947, Gromyko vetoed the applications of Italy and Finland when Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary failed to gain the necessary seven-vote majority to pass the Council.

Gromyko helped put the Palestine partition resolution through the Assembly last November 29 and is defending it now. Observers speculated that he would not give the Arab countries another vote against partition by admitting Transjordan.

China's top delegate to the U. N., Dr. T. F. Tsiang, declared his country will keep hands off on partition in the special Assembly. He said a solution of the whole Palestine problem is impossible unless Jews and Arabs agree.

One key delegate said he doubted the Assembly will reverse its action on partition.

Frederick to Buy Public Parking Lot

Frederick, Md., April 3 (Spl.).—Over the opposition of two members, William B. Burall and Charles T. Butcher, the mayor and board of aldermen agreed today to purchase the former municipal parking lot property from the heirs of the late Thomas A. Chapline for $15,000.

The city plans to sell a portion of the property to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Kiriakou for $8250, making a net cost to the municipality of $6750. The tract will be used as a free parking lot for approximately 250 automobiles.

Aldermen Burall and Butcher objected on the grounds that the city should amortize the purchase price through a nominal parking fee. They contend the general public should not be taxed to provide parking space for motorists, many of whom reside outside the city limits.

Church Repair Near End

Winchester, Va., April 3 (Spl.) Repairs to the sanctuary of the Cork Street Christian Church, damaged Palm Sunday when more than half of the ceiling collapsed only a few hours before time for Sunday school services, will be completed early next week. First services in the auditorium will be held April 11, according to the Rev. W. J. Hadden, pastor. It is costing $2000 to repair the damage.

Jews, Arabs Urged to Lay Down Their Arms

Jerusalem, Palestine, April 3 (U.P.).—British High Commissioner Sir Alan Cunningham made an precedented appeal today for Jews and Arabs to lay down their arms.

Even as Cunningham spoke the Arabs began putting the finishing touches on their blockade around Jerusalem. They also massed troops in the Judean hills for a fight to regain the vital Jewish-road to Tel Aviv, one of Jerusa-occupied village of Kastal, on the lem's main lifelines.

The blockade of Jerusalem squeezed Jewish food supplies to a trickle. There was no more fuel. The cutting off of electricity and water would make the blockade complete.

Water was becoming the decid-to conquer Jerusalem.
ing factor in the Arab's attempts

The Arabs have full cisterns, but the Jews depend almost entirely upon water piped in from Tel Aviv. This pipe can be blown up almost any time. The power station in the Arab section can be shut down at will.

Cunningham asked the Jews and Arabs to give the United Nations a chance to settle the dispute without prejudice while there still is a chance for peace in the Holy Land.

Offers His Services

He volunteered to help negotiate a cease fire agreement Official reports said a force of "many" jews had attacked Kastal before dawn and captured it from 10 Arab defenders and that the Haganah defense army was occupying the village.

The government said nine Haganah soldiers were wounded at Kastal and Arab casualties were unknown.

The Haganah "air force," according to unofficial reports, parachuted supplies and arms to the Jews inside Kastal.

[Fighting today brought to 2302 the unofficial death toll since November 29, the Associated Press said. Hundreds of Arab children, both Christians and Moslems, are being sent as war refugees from Palestine to Syria and Lebanon.]

Third Brokerage Firm Is Picketed

changes will be made next week by the United States Conciliation Service. Picket lines around the exchanges were thinner than at any time since the strike began although police contingents were still heavy.

The thrd brokerage house strike called by the union was at the firm at J. S. Bache & Co. Strike calls were issued earlier against E. F. Hutton & Co. and Shields & Co.

New York, April 3 (U.P.).—Striking Wall Street employes extended their picket lines to still another brokerage firm today as Federal conciliators reported both sides deadlocked on all issues.

Anthracite Laboratory Work to Begin Soon

The Federal Works Agency said last night that construction should begin in a few months on the Government's new anthracite laboratory at Schuylkill Haven, Pa.

The Public Buildings Administration has completed designs for the building and will build it at an estimated cost of $447,500, the FWA said. Congress authorized the laboratory in 1942 to assist the hard-coal industry in its mining and marketing problems.

Export Data 'Leak' Hearing to Open

House Committee Plans to Call Number Of Witnesses on Lard Speculation

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The public will get a chance this week to learn some of the closely guarded details of the leak of Government plans for lard exports last September.

Chairman August H. Andresen (R., Minn.) of the special House committee set up to probe speculation in commodities, last night said he hoped to start open hearings into the leak "before the end of the week."

Many witnesses have already been questioned, Andresen said, and will be called. He added that the "Department of Agriculture has been very cooperative" and that its investigation of the case had been "quite thorough."

The leak took place some time between September 3, when Government officials first started setting definite figures for their fats and oils export allocations for the last three months of the year, and September 10 when they announced the final figures.

In the meantime lard jumped from 17.7 cents to 23 cents a pound —or an average gain of about 30 per cent.

The information that leaked was that the Government was going to about double its fats and oils exports. The total was to include 452.5 million pounds, of which lard was to be raised far above earlier allocations to the huge total of 74.6 million pounds. Other allocations were 5.2 million pounds of margarine; 100.2 million pounds of shortening and other edible oils; 15.5 million pounds of drying oils; 33.1 million pounds of other inedible fats and oils; 17.1 million pounds of soap, and 86 million pounds of peanut oil in the form of 100,000 tons of shelled peanuts.

The way the market for fats and oils responded to the increased allocations, even before they were officially announced, indicated the importance of the information to a trader.

Among the witnesses the Andresen committee is expected to hear are:

J. William J. Stedman, formerly with the fats and oils branch of the Production and Marketing Administration, and now with the Bunge Corp. in Washington.

Eugene W. Brockenbrough, director of the Institute of Shortening Manufacturers, 927 15th st. nw., and formerly head of the fats and oils division of the Office of Price Administration.

Miss Dorothy Bayles of the Department of Commerce.

Miss Geraldine Canning, now employed by Brockenbrough at the Shortening Institute, formerly with the fats and oils division of the Office of International Trade at the Department of Commerce, and later with the International Emergency Food Council.

Lucille Trayland of the Institute of Shortening Manufacturers.

J. G. Lusk, broker, of Greenville, Miss.

Gordon Waller, formerly with the Federal Economic Administration, now of New York City.

The Agriculture Department learned of the leak even before the announcement of last quarter allocations was made, but too late to head it off. It started an immediate investigation by William H. Duggan, investigator for PMA.

The existence of the leak was reported to the department on September 8 by Stedman. Stedman had been invited to talk on that date to the Institute of Shortening Manufacturers at Memphis, Tenn. While there it is alleged Brockenbrough showed him a message from the latter's Washington office, in which the allocation figures were given.

Stedman recognized them as virtually accurate—in one or two cases they were at only slight variance with the final announcement.

No effort was made to keep the figures secret. They were discussed openly at the Memphis convention and written copies were given to many members of the institute.

The Brockenbrough message is said to have reported that the allocations had been approved by the Commerce Department. It was signed by Miss Trayland.

Duggan's investigation is said to include a statement from Miss Bayles that she had telephoned her friend, Miss Canning, who formerly worked with her at Commerce, on September 8, that the fats and oils allocation had been approved and would shortly be announced.

Miss Bayles stoutly insisted that she at no time revealed any figures to anyone. Duggan's report is said to have expressed confidence in Miss Bayles' statement.

Agriculture officials are reported to be looking forward to Andresen's investigation, as the latter can force witnesses to talk. Duggan had to [illegible]ceed without such power.

Brockenbrough refused to discuss the case with The Washington Post this week—an attitude he is reported to have taken toward Agriculture investigators.

On September 9, the day after the Memphis meeting, Lusk reported in a market letter from his home at Greenville, Miss., that the allocation figures had leaked from an official of the Agriculture Department.

Later it is reported several market analysts for various brokerage houses, including Herbert J. Holland of Merill Lynch, Pierce Fenner & Beane Chicago office, complained to the Department of Agriculture that advance information had been furnished their competitors.

The story of the sensational leak was first publicly divulged by George A. Parks, statistician for the fats and oils branch of PMA before the Andresen committee on March 24.

Parks and other Agriculture officials declared that investigation had cleared all Agriculture Department employes.

This aroused Commerce Department officials who also knew the figures in advance of the official announcement. Considerable 'ill feeling has since generated between the two agencies.

About 15 various Government employes know of the figures before they are made public, officials state. In some cases, when special checks are made with the industry, it is possible for some details to leak out at other sources. This doesn't explain the leak of the entire report, however.

President Signs Foreign Aid Bill

HISTORIC MOMENT—Pen in hand, President Truman reaches for the ink well to sign into law the epoch-making foreign aid bill. Each of the persons witnessing the ceremony yesterday in the White House received one of the several pens Mr. Truman used in signing copies of the measure faced a great crisis with courage and wisdom . . ."

The $5,300,000,000 authorized for the Marshall Plan will be available for expenditure over the next four and a quarter years but is expected to be used up in the 12 months beginning April 1. Early next year Congress will review the whole operation and decide how much more money may be needed.

Mr. Truman's next big task is to select an administrator for the program. The position will pay $20,000 a year and carry Cabinet rank. Most frequently mentioned for the post is Paul G. Hoffman, president of the Seudebaker Corp.

Aid Plan Passage Hailed by De Gasperi

Rome, April 3 (AP).—Premier Alcide de Gasperi sent a message to Secretary of State George C. Marshall today saying passage of the European Recovery Plan assured Italy of "new possibilities of rebirth and international cooperation."

Aid Signature Statement By Truman

Following is the text of President Truman's statement in signing the foreign aid bill:

FEW Presidents have had the opportunity to sign legislation of such importance as the Foreign Assistant Act of 1948.

The signing of this act is a momentous occasion in the world's quest for enduring peace.

I commend the Congress of the United States for the cooperation it has evidenced in the prompt passage of this measure.

Its passage is a striking manifestation of the fact that a bipartisan foreign policy can lead to effective action. It is even more striking in proof that swift and vigorous action for peace is not incompatible with the full operation of our democratic process of discussion and debate. Those who are skeptical of the effectiveness of a democratic system should ponder the lesson of the enactment of this measure.

Our program of foreign aid is perhaps the greatest venture in constructive statesmanship that any nation has undertaken. It is an outstanding example of cooperative endeavor for the common good.

THE Foreign Assistance Act is the best answer that this country can make in reply to the vicious and distorted misrepresentations of our efforts for peace which have been spread abroad by those who do not wish our efforts to succeed. This measure is America's answer to the challenge facing the free world today.

It is a measure for reconstruction, stability and peace. Its purpose is to assist in the preservation of conditions under which free institutions can survive in the world. I believe that the determination of the American people to work for conditions of enduring peace throughout the world, as demonstrated by this act, will encourage free men and women everywhere, and will give renewed hope to all mankind that there will one day be peace on earth, good will among men.

Lifesaver, British Say of Aid Program

London, April 3 (AP).—British officials say passage of the $6,098,000,000 global foreign aid bill by the United States Congress is a lifesaver.

They admitted last night Britain is as close to being stone broke as she ever has since becoming a major world power.

Only Thursday Britain renewed with Canada a credit agreement for 14 days to buy food. Now they feel that supplies under the Marshall Plan can begin to roll in about the time the two weeks are up.

Officials concede that without the European Recovery Plan Britain would have to drop her living standards to a disastrous low.

Defense Bills Top Calendar; Martin Wants Planes First

By The Associated Press

Speaker Martin pushed to the top of the congressional schedule yesterday measures to bring "the whole fighting force up to greater strength and efficiencey."

With the tax-cutting and foreign aid bills out of the way, Martin told reporters "airplanes should come first" because our air strength is "uncomfortably low." He said there "is strong sentiment" to raise the Air Force to 70 groups instead of the 55 the Administration now is proposing.

Martin did not commit himself on what Congress may do about universal military training of the draft.

Several appropriation bills still are on the congressional work sheet.

Sees Oleo Tax Action

In addition, Martin said, the House will pass a bill to repeal or lower oleomargarne taxes. He said he hopes the House can act on an anti-lynching bill this month but "I can't say definitely."

The House leadership has reached no decision, Martin said, on revising the wage-hour law or on a Senate bill to provide 300 million dollar Federal aid to the states for schools.

"I think there will be some kind of housing bill and some agriculture bill," the speaker said, "but we can't do anything on bills that wll require more money until we find out what the military requirements are and then the state of our finances."

Consequently, he said, there will be a Republican conference on the whole military situation. He ndicated that decisions on money must be made within 10 days because an appropriation bill for the Army and Air Force "will be shooting right out" o the appropriations committee.

"We've got to get the manpower to make this country strong," he said. "We've got to be strong to be able to keep the peace and enjoy it."

The Senate Armed Services Committee, rather than the House is taking the lead on draft and universal military training legislation.

U. S. Starts Shoring Up Fuel, Power Reserves

By the United Press

The Government last night began shoring up some of its fuel and power reserves in view of the stepped-up defense program.

Representatives of the Nation's electric utilities, public and private, were called to meet here Monday with Arthur M. Hill, chairman of the National Security Resources Board. They will assess the Nation's power potential in the light of a possible future emergency.

The Interior Department, at Navy request, withdrew from private use 2480 acres of Federal land for possible inclusion in the Navy's Elk Hills, Calif., oil reserves.

Planners Eye Air Transport Of Field Army

By the United Press

Gen. Jacob L. Devers, Army gorund force commander, said yesterday that present war planning envisions transportation of an entire field army into a combat area by air.

A field army, including all necessary support troops, normally would number about 360,000 men, although for air delivery it might be reduced through streamlining procedures.

Devers and three other generals discussed "air transportability" of the modern army in a group of articles written for the Pegasus, publication of the Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corp.

Maj. Gen. Doyle O. Hickey, chief of the ground forces development section, revealed that development of detachable fuselages and other air delivery devices might eliminate the need for gliders and parachutes in air landing operations.

Eventually, "instead of hitting the beaches we will hit the objective and the fight will begin wheer most end, after long overland combat, on vital enemy terrain," wrote Maj. Gen. Archibald V. Arhold, chief of Army plans.

Mystery Planes Over Greenland

Copenhagen, Denmark, April 3 (AP).—The newspaper Berlingske Tidende said in a dispatch from Godthaab, Greenland, tonight that "unidentified planes had been observed over the eastern part of the island during the last few nights."

The dispatch added that several planes—coming from the east—had been located over Amgmagsalik, but that "it has been impossible to state the exact number or nationality of planes."

The American consul at Godthaab was quoted as saying the planes were not American.

Question-Answer On New Tax Law

By The Associated Press

Here are questions and answers on the new tax law, which Congress passed over the President's veto.

This new law, although passed only Friday, cuts everyone's 1948 income tax back to January 1. But the boss will not start taking the new, lower tax out of your pay check till May 1.

Q. Since my tax has been cut back to January 1, then too much tax has been withheld from me. How does the boss make up for that? A. He doesn't. He'll just start on May 1 taking less tax from you, according to the new rate, from May 1 to the end of the year.

Q. Then hoy do I ever get straight on that overcharged tax taken since January 1? A. You wait till you make your final return in 1949 on 1948 income. Whatever refund is due you, you will then get from the Government.

About Split in Income

Q. But this new law says husbands and wives can spli their income to get a lower tax. When do I do that? I'm married. Should I remind my boss of that? A. No. Husbands and wives go along just as they have been going. You don't split your income during 1948. Yo udo that in 1949 when you file a final return on 1948 income.

Although the law allows couples to split their incomes, that doesn't change the way the boss has been withholding tax from you, except to cut down the amount he would have withheld if there had been no new law.

Q. But what do I do about the the boss? Tell him anyhing? Change anything; fill out new forms? A. No. Just sit tight unless you're in one of the two groups—blind or over 65 years of age—explained here:

1. Every taxpayer, no matter what his age, now gets a personal exemption of $600. (It used to be $500). This means $600 of your income is not taxable. And you get a $600 exemption for your wife, too. And you get a $600 exemption for each dependent. A wife is not a dependent. But if you're a taxpayer and are 65 years old or will be 65 in 1948, you get an extra $600 exemption for yourself. If your wife is 65 or will be in 1948, you get an extra $600 exemption for her.

Example Is Given

Example: You, the taxpayers, are 65; you get a total $1200 examption. If your wife s 65 you get another $1200 exemption. But if you have a dependent who is 65 or older, you get only the straight $600 exemption for him.

2. Every taxpayer who is blind gets an extra $600 exemption, in addition to hs regular $600 exemption. If your wife is blind, you get an extra $600 exemption for her, plus her regular $600 exemption.

Example: If you're a taxpayer and are blind, you get a total $1200 exemption for yourself. If your wife is blind, you get a $1200 exemption for her, too. But if you have a blind dependent, you get only the usual $600 exemption for a dependent.

If you're a taxpeyer and are 65 and are blind, you get a total $1800 exemption: The regular $600, plus $600 for being 65, plus $600 for being blind. You get an $1800 exemption for your wife if she s 65 and blind.

If you're in Nos. 1 or 2 above you should—before May 1—fill out Form W-4, called a withholding exemption certificate, and give it to your boss. Then the boss will make allowance for your age or blindness in figuring the amount of tax to withhold from you.

Two Groups Affected

But only the people in Nos. 1 and 2 have to fill out any kind of form for the boss before he starts taking less tax from you on May 1.

Q. What of those people who on or before March 15 filed an estimated income tax return for 1948? What do they do? A. Some people on or before March 15 had to file an estimated tax return on their 1948 income because the full tax was not being withheld from their income, or no tax was being withheld.

By March 15 they had to start making the first of four payments on the difference between the full tax they'd owe in 1948 and the amount of tax,(if any, withheld from them in 1948.

The next payments are due June 15, September 15 and January 15, 1949, so their next payment is due June 15. On that date these people file a revised estimate on their 1948 income tax. For some of them, because of the new cut, this will mean paying less estimated tax. For some their estimated tax will be wiped out altogether.

Two Governors Crossed Up as Sirup-Samplers

Chardon, Ohio, April 3 (AP).—The Governors of Vermont and Ohio were crossed-up today.

In a blindfold maple sirup-sampling test, Gov. Ernest W. Gibson of Vermont preferred the Ohio product, and Governor Thomas J. Herbert of Ohio indicated a preference for the Vermont liquid.

Both spoonfuls tasted by Governor Gibson were Ohio sirup. Governor Herbert was given a double dose of Vermont sirup—and liked it.

Both Governors shook hands after the "battle."

The contest had been billed as an effort to determine once and for all which State produces the better maple sirup, and it had been assumed each Governor would sample the product of each State.

Cathedral Tones...

Piano Size ORGAN
by Minshall-Estey

Truly the answer to every music lover's dream of a piano size organ that will produce full, rich cathedral tones. The most demanding organists laud its scope and versatility in interpreting the merest whispered notes ranging to rafter-ringing crescendos. It has a single six-octave manual with sub-bass on the keyboard in place of foot-pedals. The simplicity of the console blends with any type of furnishings.

An entirely New Principle in Electronic Organs

The true, resonant tones of the Minshall-Estey are actually produced by a moving column of air, as in a pipe organ, and diffused throughout the room, whether a small chapel or a large auditorium. Here at last is the perfect organ for home, church, auditorium or funeral chapel.

(The law specifies cuts of 12.6 per cent, 7.4 per cent and 5 per cent for items "A," "B" and "C" on line 8. Who Pays for Telephone Expansion?

INVESTORS DO.

They buy telephone bonds and stocks and we use the money to build new telephone facilities.

On the other hand, the money you pay us for telephone service is used for wages, taxes, depreciation and other day-by-day operating costs.

So when you read about the millions of dollars we are putting into our expansion program—or see a new telephone building going up—you can be sure that investors' money is being put to work to expand and improve the telephone service you use.

Thus, we use two kinds of dollars:

Customers' dollars—payments received for telephone service—are used to meet day-by-day operating costs.

Investors' dollars—savings of people from all walks of life who invest in the telephone business—are used to put up buildings and buy new equipment.

Tax Revisers Turn Next to Excise Levies

By The Associated Press

Congressional tax framers turned yesterday to legislation revising excise and corporation levies, after passing a $4,800,000,000 cut for individual income taxpayers.

Chairman Knutson (R., Minn.) announced the House Ways and Means Committee will tackle this week the job of writing a general revision of the tax statutes, particularly in the excise field, "to iron out inequities." Knutson wrote the bil to cut $4,800,000 off for individual income taxes, which Congress passed yesterday over President Truman's veto.

Knutson told reporters, "if we can afford it we should eliminate the excises on transportation and communications." Moreover, he said he would like to see the excises on cosmetics and luggage, now 20 per cent of retail price, returned to their former 10 per cent of retail levels.

The transportation tax, at 3 per cent on the bills for moving freight, now yields about 276 million dollars annually; the communications excise (15 per cent on local telephone bills, 25 per cent on long distance telephone, telegraph, cables, radio and leased wires) brings the treasury about 418 million dollars annually—or a total of almost 700 million dollars on the communications and transportation levies. The cosmetics and luggage excises yield 180 million dollars.

Senator George (D., Ga.), senior Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, saw little hope for cutting excise levies at this time.

"In view of the present demands for the rearmament program and for foreign aid, it would be unwise to eliminate any excises or make sharp revisions at this time," he told reporters.

Westinghouse Refuses Pay Increase Request

Pittsburgh, April 3 (AP).—The Westinghouse Electric Corp. today told employes by letter that a third round of wage incraeses cannot be justified, because they could "only serve to start up the inflationary spiral once more."

The United Electrical Workers (CIO) now is negotiating a new contract with Westinghouse, employer of about 100,000 persons. No specific wags demands have been made other than for a "substantial" boost.

Trade Talks Planned

Paris, April 3 (NYHT).—A French delegattion is leaving for Madrid tomorrow to negotiate economic and financial agreements with Generalissimo Franco.

2 Scrippses Defend Editor Against Sister

San Diego, Calif., April 3 (Spl.). In regard to the suit filed in Washington, D. C., by Mrs. George Gallowhur against George B. Parker, editor in chief of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, Robert P. Scripps and Charles E. Scripps made the following statement:

"We are convinced that the accusations against Mr. George B. Parker brought by our sister, Mrs. Gallowhur, are without moral or legal justification.

"Mr. Parker has devoted his life to our concern. There is no one in journalism more respected for integrity, personal and professional.

"We are two of three trustees who control the Scripps-Howard concern. We are familiar with the business transactions in question. We approve of these transactions and take full responsibility for the trust's action therein.

"We, like Mrs. Gallowhur, are beneficiaries of the Edward W. Scripps trust. We believe that Mr. Parker's association and dealings with the concern and with the trust have been greatly to our personal benefit."

Fairlington School Plans Hit New Snag

123 Presentments

Grand Jury Gets Fatal Scalding Case

Details of the fatal scalding of Joseph Brennan, 5, of Kaywood Gardens, Mount Rainier, Md., will be among 123 cases to be presented to the Prince Georges County grand jury Monday by State's Attorney A. Gwynn Bowie.

The Brennan boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Brennan, 2702 Webster st., Kaywood Gardens, was scalded fatally March 7 when he fell into a pit dug by workmen who were repairing leaking steam pipes in the apartment development heating system. Witnesses told police only two doors had been placed over the pit and that the boy was one of three jumping on the doors.

The State's attorney said he would present all of the facts as gathered by the police to the Grand Jury and that it would be up to that body whether any action is to be taken.

The Grand Jury will be selected Monday at the opening of the April term of Prince Georges County Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro, Md. C. Norris Hartman, Suitland grocer, has been named foreman of the body. The 23 members will begin considering cases as soon as they have been charged by the judges of the Circuit Court. Two petit juries also will be selected at the same time.

Three of the cases to be presented will concern charges of molesting small children, including one of carnal knowledge, State's Attorney Bowie said.

Site Is Filled In And Unsuitable, Committee Says

The long fight for a new school in North Fairlington appeared to have struck another snag yesterday.

The 4-acre school site—title for which has been sought by Arlington for seven months—may not provide an adequate school foundation, School Board Member C. E Tuthill said yesterday.

A special school site committee, of which Tuthill is chairman, yesterday inspected the North Fairlington plot.

Tuthill said the middle portion of the land is "filled in to a depth of 40 feet," and that "apparently you just can't build on land filled in that deep."

He said he understood it took as much as 25 years for land to settle to permit building on it.

Erection of a school in north Fairlington had been approved by the old school board last October. A 14-room school at a cost of $441,000 is planned.

Several earlier attempts to contact out-of-town owners of the 3500-unit development failed. More recently, School Superintendent Fletcher Kemp has been negotiating possible title to the plot with the owners.

Arlington Commonwealth's Attorney Denman Rucker has advised the school board that if these negotiations fail, the county has a "sufficient basis for filing a suit" to determine whether or not the land has been designated as a public school site.

Resources Waste In U. S. Declared Unequaled in Past

By The Associated Press

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization yesterday said America's waste of its natural resources has perhaps been unequaled in human history.

It blamed a "spirit of individual enterprise" for exploiting the soil, forest and water resources.

But this wastage is not confined to the United States, the FAO said. A report on soil conservation problems throughout the world said millions of acres of land are being lost each year through erosion.

The result was said to be a reduction in the potential supply of food, fibers and timber products.

The report paid particular attention to China and the United States. Together, the FAO said, they furnish "examplese of land use and abuse under many combinations of physical, social and economic conditions."

Grim to Head Winchester GOP

Winchester, Va., April 3 (AP).—Winchester and Frederick County Republicans reorganized their executive committees at meetings held here last night.

The city committee elected Robert Grim, chairman; William Grove, vice chairman, and Peachy Hockman, secretary treasurer. The county group is headed by Howell M. Bond, chairman; P. E. Lineburg, vice chairman and treasurer, and Bryan Stotler, secretary.

while they hung on to the sides of the car, which eventually crashed into a trailer truck at Florida and New York aves ne.

Hamilton died the next day of multiple injuries. Rouse, who received a compound fracture of the leg, was hospitalized for months and returned to duty a year later.

At the time of the tragedy Rouse, then a deteictive sergeant, was attached to the auto squad. Hamilton was of the Thirteenth Precinct but was detailed to midnight cruise with Rouse.

Aide to Barrett

Police Chief Robert J. Barrett recently made Rouse, a member of the force since 1924, an acting lieutenant to serve as his chauffeur and personal aide. Rouse, who is 46, lives at 1623 R st. se.

The Gold Medal and Bronze Bar went to Barnett and Wallace for their work in rescuing Miss Lucy Brown, 30, from the tenth floor of the Roger Smith Hotel during a fire November 3, 1946.

Under the direction and supervision of Wallace, Barnett was lowered by a lifeline from the roof of the hotel to the tenth floor window, where he picked the woman up, and holding her in his arms, was lowered two more stories to the top of a fully extended aerial ladder.

Both men at the time were attached to No. 2 Engine Company. Barnett, 35, now attached to No. 3 Truck Company, was a traffic division policeman for four years before joining the Fire Department in July, 1944. Shortly before he switched over, he miraculously walked away uninjured from an accident in which his motorcycle collided with a fire truck while both were responding to a local alarm.

Yesterday he explained the switch with: "I just thought this was the better job of the two." He lives at 4754 Homer ave. se.

Wallace, who is 41 and lives at 812 Easley st., Silver Spring, Md., is now attached to No. 13 Truck Company. A member of the Fire Department since 1930, he once received honorable mention for his work in helping rescue a woman from the second floor of a blazing home.

Trapped "Stop-Light" Bandits

Hunt was awarded the Bronze Bar for his attempt to apprehend two holdup men June 13, 1947. With Detective Sergt. Ernest P. Jefferson, who yesterday was given honorable mention, Hunt trapped the "stop-light" bandits at 15th st. and Rhode Iiland ave. nw., where they had victimized several persons.

During an ensuing gun battle, Hunt was shot in the back by one of the bandits, both of whom were later apprehended and convicted. Hunt, who is 48 and lives at 601 Hillwood ave., Falls Church, Va., was unable to return to duty until December. Both he and Jefferson are members of the robbery squad.

The 1946 Bronze Bar, the only outstanding award to be given for the fiscal year, was awarded Currier for his rescue of Alease McAlphine, 29, from a third floor room of her burning home at 214 F st. nw., October 25, 1945.

Then serving as aide to the Seventh Battalion chief, Currier plunged through dense smoke and extreme heat to carry the woman to safety.

Appointed to the force in 1936, Currier, who is 39, is now attached to No. 19 Engine Co. He once received honorable mention for helping carry a woman and two children from the second floor of a burning home at 3rd and R sts. nw. He lives at 2317 Valley dr., Alexandria, Va.

Estes was attached to the First Precinct.

times made its repair uneconomical.

The Federal Government acquired the canal as a historical recreational area in 1938, and restored it from the District to Seneca, Md., about 21 miles away. It would be too costly to make any further repairs, according to Undersecretary Chapman.

If the survey shows that the canal parkway is practicable, and Congress approves its construction, the scenic route would be connected at Great Falls with the to-be-built extension of the George Washington Parkway running up from Washington.

A public subcommittee will hold hearings on the bill authorizing the survey at 10 a. m. Monday.

Wisconsin Circus Is All MacArthur

Dewey and Stassen Backers Fight For End Rings in Tuesday's Show

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Milwaukee, Wis., April 3.—Boom or bubble, Gen. Douglas MacArthur's elusive candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination has changed always unpredictable Wisconsin into a Barnum's paradise.

Under the same big tent you can find three or four different MacArthurs who haven't speaking acquaintance with each other and whom the general himself probably hasn't met.

Not knowing where he stands on most current issues, a strangely dissimilar string of barkers each describes a different man. Better still, they will let you draw your own specifications.

Depending on which MacArthur Club leader you talk to, he's described as both progressive and ultra-conservative, both nationalist and world-minded. The only MacArthur on which all are agreed is the "Stop Russia" MacArthur.

Dewey Men Concede It

Political observers, who have been burned badly twice before in clocking a Wisconsin primary, are viewing this one with mingled wonder and uncertainty. They haven't been able to feel, touch or explain the MacArthur sentiment and yet they know it is there.

They think it is here to the extent of a majority of the April 6 vite, if not a near-sweep. They base their conclusions on the behavior of the other two GOP contestants, raher han the ballyhoo from the General's bandwagon.

At the desperate behest of advance men Hickman Powell and Hamilton Gaddis, Governor Thomas E. Dewey has just completed a quick two-day stump of the State. He played to good if only mildly enthustiastic audiences, but the Dewey gloom is almost as thick as when he entered. Privately the Dewey people fear it's a MacArthur "silde," say they will be satisfied with five or six of the 27 delegates if they also lead Harold E. Stassen.

The Stassen leaders seem more and more confident they will outstrip Dewey, insist they are running their only nip-and-tuck race against MacArthur. Stassen stabbing into every corner of the State right up until election day, is still claiming a majority. But his lieutenants allow themselves plenty of margin, view the "strong man" MacArthur act with wonder, if not respect.

Democrats' Opinion

Perhaps the most unprejudiced witnesses to MarArthur sentiment are the State's top Democratic leaders, who have been all over Wisconsin in a hair-pulling contest of their own for Democratic national committeemen. They see the general as way out front, with Stassen and Dewey trailing, in that order.

For what MacArthur thinks about it all, and how he stands on pressing of the day, you have to just take the sometimes conflicting opinion of three different MacArthur groups, who are hardly on speaking terms with each other. They give you their "concept" of MacArthur.

Aside from indicating his willingness to accept the nomination, and a few generalized statements in cables to friends, he has taken no personal part in the campaign. Closest to it is a rebroadcast of his dramatic 1945 speech on the battleship Missouri, when Japan formally surrendered. This is being piped through the State, much as Dewey's voice was transcribed for the voters before his backers decided it wasn't enough.

Each of the three main groups supporting the general gives you pretty much the MacArthur they have taken to their bosoms—a candidate in the image of themselves.

In the first group, white-haired, ruddy-faced former Governor Philip E. Lafollette, out of power in the State for 10 years, courts the old Progressive and Independent Republican vote, with the new and rather surprising "Liberal" MacArthur.

Lafollette, suspected by organizaton Republicans of trying for a personal comeback, was wartime public relations colonel on MacArthur's staff. Phil tells the voters MacArthur turned his back on "reactionary" elements in Australia, defended civil liberties, broke up monopolies, recognized the rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively, launched land reforms and worked for social and economic progress in Japan.

America First Backing

The second group is led by Lansing Hoyt, Milwaukee national chairman of the MacArthur for President Clubs and once State head of the America first movement. In 1944 Hoyt experimentally and almost alone entered MacArthur's name in the primary but this year out-of-State America Firsters from all over the country have come in with money and help. Robert E. Wood of Chicago, former head of the America First movement, has personally contributed $2500.

Hoyt hints strongly he has been personally in touch with MacArthur but gives you nothing for the record on the contact. Here's Hoyt's MacArthur: "He showed himself rather liberal in Japan but he adhered strictly to our belief in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and he was not liberal to the extent of some of the radicals around here.

"MacArthur is the only one in the world who has proved he can stop communism dead in its tracks—if anybody can keep the peace, he's the man. He can bring all factions of the Republican Party together."

Old-Lines Support

In the third group are old-line conservative Republicans like William J. Campbell, Oshkosh lumber dealers and a former Republican State chairman, also Fred R. Zimmerman, vote-getting Wisconsin secretary of State. Zimmerman, once allegedly linked with both America first and the Klan, led the delegate slate for Dewey in 1944. Campbell was an unsuccessful Stassen delegate in 1944 but now is at odds with the State GOP organization friendly to Stassen. He reportedly has strong Taft sympathies.

To make things the merrier, Col. Robert McCormick's Chicago Tribune, circulating heavily in this area, and Hearst's Chicago-American and Milwaukee Sentinel have been rootin-tootin' for MacArthur. Stassen charged yesterday that much of the MacArthur strength here is due to this "unusual" newspaper support.

And so it's another muddy track in Wisconsin, where the primaries make punks out of experts. In 1944 they picked Willkie and lost. They guessed Bob LaFollette in 1946 and missed. The burnt finger boys are all back for the MacArthur circus, but you can't buy a ticket in the crowd.

Dewey Puts Prediction in Sealed Envelope

Albany, N. Y., April 3 (U.P.).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey returned today from a flying campaign tour of Wisconsin, puzzled over the political outlook there.

Dewey declined to make a forecast but put his prediction in a sealed envelope to be opened after the results are tabulated.

Forces supporting Dewey's candidacy generally agreed that Gen. Dougles MacArthur is likely to win a majority of Wisconsin's 27 convention delegates, but challenged predictions that Harold Stassen would get the second largest number.

Bomb Lands in Red Zone

Vienna, April 3 (AP).—A bomb was dropped by a plane flying over the Rusisan zone of Vienna today, and a child was seriously injured. An official announcement said Soviet headquarters in Vienna was notified of the incident.

County to Rule on 3 Late Filers for GOP Race

Prince Georges County election officials will decide Tuesday whether to accept names of three candidates in the May 3 primary that were filed after the April 1 deadline.

Names of Edwin A. Glenn, Suitland, who is also a Fifth District candidate for Congress; William R. Rice, Forest Heights, and James S. Brady, jr., Bowie, were filed with the board of election supervisors Friday. The three seek nomination as delegates to the State Republication convention.

Samuel Wyvill, a member of the county election board, said the names were accepted in the belief that the deadline was 30 days before the primary election.

It was later learned by the board that the 1946 law, carrying the 30-day deadline, was revised by the 1947 Legislature which set the April 1 limit. Wyvill said the board had copies of the 1946 regulations and that copies of the 1947 law were not yet in general circulation.

Acceptance of the three names would make 14 candidates—two complete slates, for the delegateships. One slate has already been indorsed by the county GOP organization, which is supportnig C. Maurice Weidemeyer in the Fifth District race for Congress.

The board turned the matter over to Attorney Frank Hall for study before the Tuesday meeting. Convention delegates will choose Maryland's delegates to the national party convention in Philadelphia the week of June 21.

'Dynamic Capitalism' Urged By Stassen as Anti-Red Arm

Chicago, April 3 (U.P.).—Presidential Aspirant Harold E. Stassen today called for a "dynamic people's capitalism" to offset Russian-promoted communism.

Stassen spoke to nearly 2000 persons at a banquet celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Chicago Board of Trade, the biggest market-place for grain in the world.

"A dynamic modern people's capitalism" should be the American objective in answer to the ideology of materialistic communism that is being "aggressively promoted by Russia throughout the world," Stassen said. "We should set out affirmatively to defeat communism in the world on the economic and ideological fronts. If we do so I believe we will have a much better chance of not being called upon to defeat them on the military front."

For the economic, Stassen suggested halting shipments to Russia that could become part of "a Communist war machine." He said that American aid should be given to countries that "are moving toward freedom" and denied to those that "are seeking to drestroy liberty."

Tojo May Know Fate by Mid-June

Tokyo, April 3 (AP).—Hideki Tojo and his 24 fellow defendants in the major Japanese war crimes trial may know their fate by mid-June.

There is every indication that the 11 justices of the Allied tribunal will give their verdict by the first week in June, and General MacArthur is not expected to take more than a week or two to review it.

The trial, now in the closing arguments stage, will be two years old on June 3. The indictments were handed down April 29, 1946.

D. C. Travel Study On Area Roads Due

Highway Plans Will Be Based On Traffic Date

A greater Washington area transportation study to determine travel habits of area residents and provide a basis for improving highway facilities will begin here about April 15, Deputy Engineer of Streets S. R. Harrison announced yesterday.

Planning Engineer D. S. Brinkley estimated it will take approximately six months to complete. The study will include these three methods for determining where travel originates, its destination, and reason for trips:

1. Personal interviews in 5 per cent of area residences, chosen on a proportional basis to obtain a "true sample."
2. Interview stations at points outside the District on 34 major highways serving Washington.
3. Operators of about 10 per cent of trucks and taxicabs registered here will be interviewed.

Student Held In Grade 'Fix'

was able to corroborate the fact that 200 or 300 students' records are missing. However, photostatic copies are available, he said.

He said he was told by Prince that students' cards were removed by accomplices working in the dean's office and in the veterans' office, as well as his own office, retyped to incorporate the desired changes in grades or other parts of the records, and then returned to the original files.

Charged with accepting money under false pretenses, Prince was released on $300 bond set by Judge Ellen K. Raedy in Municipal Court yesterday, for a further hearing Thursday. A hearing by the United States attorney's office will also be held next week.

Wilkinson has suspected that something questionable has been going on for some time, he said. He had nothing specific to go on until he learned that three girl students who had failing grades in February had been promised reinstatement in the current term, which began last Monday.

At least one of the girls had paid Prince $100, according to police. She was asked to pay another $100 when she complained to Prince after receiving a notice that she was being dropped from her classes, police said.

Wilkinson had told Prince he would withhold action on the three cases until a full investigation could be made, he said. Prince thereupon used the fact that the girls were still attending classes as proof that he could "fix" students' dismissals, according to the registrar. Actually, the girls have not been allowed to reregister for this term, he added.

Wesley S. Williams, Prince's attorney, quoted Prince as saying he was "an innocent victim of circumstances and a tool of the higher-ups." Registrar Wilkinson said "he tried to make me believe he is the master mind."

The registrar said Prince told him he had seen service in France during the war and had driven supply trucks for the Army between the rear areas and the front lines. His parents are dead, he said. He is not employed by the university.

Teen-Ager Garage Business Booms For New Canteen

Falls Church teen-agers who yesterday took over a town garage to raise money for their new recreation canteen did a booming business.

So successful was their 24-hour stand at Nalls Garage, 551 N. Washington st., that Falls Church police yesterday had to send a squad car to the scene to break up a jam of waiting motorists.

From 10 to 15 of the young people were on hand at all times during the day to wash windshields, fill tanks, and polish autos. They reported that "tips are opuring in." Station Owner Harry Nalls is donating all profits from the 24-hour period ending at 9 p. m. last night to the Falls Church Canteen, now being built at Hillwood ave. and Douglas st.

Does Stomach Gas and Bloat Make You Feel Miserable?

If so, here is how you may get blessed relief in freeing your stomach from this nervous distress. It works this way:

Everytime food enters the stomach a vital gastric juice must flow normally to break-up certain food particles; else the food may ferment. Sour food, acid indigestion and gas frequently cause a morbid, touchy, fretful, peevish, nervous condition, loss of appetite, underweight, restless sleep, weakness.

To get real relief you must increase the flow of this vital gastric juice. Medical authorities, in independent laboratory tests on human stomachs, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in increasing this flow when it is too little or scanty due to a non-organic stomach disturbance. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, SSS Tonic helps build-up non-organic, weak, watery blood in nutritional anemia—so with a good flow of this gastric digestive juice, plus rich red-blood you should eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better.

Avoid punishing yourself with overdoses of soda and other alkalizers to counteract gas and bloating when what you so dearly need is SSS Tonic to help you digest food for body strength and repair. Don't wait! Join the host of happy people SSS Tonic has helped. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle of SSS Tonic from your drug store today. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Report on Bill Favors Increase In Wheat Exports

By The Associated Press

A measure that would allow larger exports of wheat and flour to European nations was reported favorably to the Senate yesterday.

The Senate Agriculture Committee asked repeal of the present law requiring that 150 million bushels of wheat be retained in this country as a carryover on July 1.

Both the State and Agriculture Departments have urged such action in order to send more American wheat overseas during the next three months.

Officials reported that another 50 million bushels of wheat and flour could be safely exported during the next three months. This would be in addition to 450 million bushels already exported.

2 Rush-Hour S-6 Bus Trips to Start Monday

Bus service on Capital Transit Co.'s 16th and Eastern line will be extended to Eastern ave. and Newell rd. nw. during morning rush hours beginning Monday, the Public Utilities Commission revealed yesterday.

CTC officials said two S-6 line trips will originate at Eastern and Newell—one at 7:31, the other at 7:57 a. m.—and travel via Eastern to 16th. From there they will follow the regular S-6 route to 11th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. The trip will take approximately 40 minutes, they said.

The new service was seen as a partial victory for Shepherd Park Citizens Association, which asked PUC at an informal hearing March 3 for extension and improved service on the line.

While the plan differs in detail from suggestions made by the citizens association, PUC Chairman James H. Flanagan said he hoped it would "help" ease the situation in the neighborhood.

A formal hearing on the citizens proposal will be held Wednesday at 10 a. m. in the District Building as scheduled, despite the new service beginning Monday, Flanagan said.

Party Battle Near End in Alexandria

Democrats Pick 4 for Council Tuesday After One of Bitterest Fights in Years

By Richard Lyons
Post Reporter

Alexandria Democrats will nominate four men for city council seats Tuesday after one of the bitterest local campaigns in recent years.

Arthur F. Campbell

Candidates will be chosen at large as decided at the March referendum, to run in the general election June 8.

Most of the 11 candidates agree Alexandria needs more schools, better better roads, nonpartisan local elections, new city charter, wiser spending and complete tax collectoins. The controversy has arisen over their method of getting elected to do the job.

Four Branded "Clique"

Four candidates running on the same platform have drawn criticism for "forming a clique, pledged in advance to vote together."

They are Arthur F. Campbell, Randall J. Hicks, Albert A. Smoot and David D. Squires, who announced their candidacies before the referendum on condition the at-large plan won.

The attack came from the Veterans Committee for Veterans, formed last week to support veterans Leroy S. Bendheim, Marshall J. Beverley, Roy C. Bragg, Claude B. Harris and John T. Worthington.

Other candidates are John J. Ewald and Ernest L. Mankin.

Campbell and the others deny the "clique" charge. They say they agree on a general platform, but differ among themselves on details. They justify their stand by saying the city should be treated not as a political body, but as a corporation with the council acting as its board of directors.

Hurl Charge in Turn

They in turn charge the committee is backed by the "Alexandria machine," and specifically by a Civil and Police Court Judge, James R. Duncan, whom they call "a politician who for years has sought to dominate city council."

The veterans have accepted the indorsement, but proclaim their complete independence.

Another group called Veterans Nonpartisan Voters League has announced a meeting Monday at 8 p. m. in Jefferson School Annex, Cameron and West sts., where all candidates will be invited to speak.

Voting hours will be 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. at the regular ward voting places. The Democratic Committee warned voters that ballots marked with more than four choices will be thrown out.

Brief accounts of the candidates follow:

Leroy S. Bendheim, 42, 309 Mansion dr., a native Alexandrian, has practiced law there 20 years. He was a member of the school board 9 years, 5 years its chairman. He is an Army veteran.

He urges carrying out a five-year plan for new school construction, appointment of a committee of residents to work out an equitable tax plan for city, referendum on future bond issues, creation of a civil service program and retirement plan for city employes, creation of fire and police trial boards.

Marshall J. Beverley, 36, Hunting Terrace Apt., is a native Alexandrian with 15 years' banking experience. He is a Navy veteran and a director of the Alexandria Chapter, American Red Cross. Biggest plank in his platform is "sound and economical financial structure." He would abolish the offices of smoke control and tax inspectors, and urges construction of a sewage treatment plant.

Roy C. Bragg, 47, 206 W. Mount Ida ave., a resident for 45 years, was a lawyer before the war. He served in the Marine Corps, is now in business. He is a former president of Mount Vernon Parent-Teacher Association.

He wants added personnel for the city Health Department and its facilities made more readily available. He also urges a retirement plan for city employes.

Resigned From Committee

Arthur F. Campbell, 54, 2000 Russell rd., is a native Alexandrian and local businessman. He resigned as chairman of the city Democratic Committee to become a candidate.

Randall J. Hicks, 50, Presidential Gardens, is a local realtor, has lived in Alexandria eight years. He is chairman of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped. A combat veteran of World War II, he is the only veteran not supported by the Veterans Committee.

Albert A. Smoot, 43, 410 Duke st., is a native Alexandrian, son of a former mayor. A local businessman, he was formerly president of the Alexandria Community Chest.

David D. Squires, 42, Quaker la., moved to Alexandria in 1936. He is a local businessman, vice president of the Alexandria Tuberculosis Association and was the first candidate to urge nonpartisan local elections.

These four men join in urging: creation of an independent charter commission to study and revise the city's charter, study of the need for annexing more land to the city, preparation of city budget in time for public study and criticism, city's books be available to public.

Only Incumbent Running

John J. Ewald, 39, 410 N. Alfred st., is the only one of the six incumbent ward councilmen seeking reelection. He is serving his third term. A native of Alexandria, he is yardmaster at Potomac Yards, where he has worked 21 years. He wants an expanded recreation program to curb juvenile delinquency in the city.

Claude B. Harris, 44, 14 Glendale ave., moved to Alexandria in 1932. He is in local business, an Army veteran of the last war. He urges a civil service and retirement plan for city employes, balanced budget.

Ernest L. Mankin, 59, 210 N. Patrick st., is an assistant car accountant at Potomac Yards, where he has worked for 42 years. A native Alexandrian, he served one term in the council, representing the third ward from 1940 to 1942 He says residents must "either face higher taxes or stop wanting so much." Is against added bonded indebtedness, but thinks the school program may be an emergency. Wants sewage treatment plant and city incinerator for garbage.

John T. Worthington, 59, 506 W. Braddock, rd., a native Alexandrian, is district manager for an insurance company and an Army veteran of World War I. He considers the principal needs of the city to be schools, streets, and sewage treatment.

else the union faces the risk of heavy fines for contempt.

Lewis and the union failed to comply with an injunction to end a strike once before, in December, 1946. They were fined $710,000 as a result.

Last night's order was as novel as it was realistic. It appeared to brush aside the legalisms of both Lewis and the operators.

Justice Department officials took the view—and the order reflected it—that it did not matter whether Lewis called the strike or not. The fact was: there was a strike. And a strike is the most convincing, demonstrable fact of action by a union.

Therefore, in the Department view, the stoppage in the coal fields is the act not of independent indviduals, but of those men acting through their organization, a union. A union is something which can be sued. It is an entity against which a case can be directed. It has a treasury, which can be fined if the union fails to comply with a court order.

The union officials—of whom Lewis is one—were called on to stop "permitting" the strke. Further, they were ordered to instruct all members to go back to work immediately.

Similarly, the order seemed to cut through all persiflage on the part of the operators. They had contended that the dispute was only between Lewis and Szra Van Horn, the operators' trustee on a board created to administer the miners' welfare fund.

But the order implied that Van Horn was only—as Lewis has long insisted—the agent of the operators. For it instructed the operators, not Van Horn, to fall to at once and bargain on the dispute.

The height of realism was in a clause of the order saying that there must come also to the bargaining table "those individuals or interests . . . who have bargained . . . in effecting past agreements and settling past disputes."

In plain English, this meant Benjamin F. Fairless, president of U. S. Steel Corp., and George M. Humphrey, head of Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co., the biggest coal producer in the country. Those two men were the key figures in reaching the settlement that led to last July's operator-union contract.

Earlier this year, Lewis had tried to bargain with him, but they refused. Fairless said he wasn't a signer of the contract and hence not a proper person to negotiate an amendment to the contract.

The Justice Department appeared to feel that that was as much hokum as was Lewis' contention that the strike was none of his doing.

Earlier in the day, there had been much speculation as to whether Lewis' letter of yesterday actually wa sa back-to-work order (or the "cover" for a secret order to that effect), or whether it was just a document issued in antcipation of a ninjunction. In the altter case, its purpose would be to make it difficult for an injunction against him to be enforced.

His letter, containing repeated denials that he had in any way ordered or inspired the three-weeks walkout, said the miners were not under, and had never been under any orders to quit.

Nor, he said, were there any "directions or suggestions, expressed or implied" from him or any union officers to "cease work or to continue to cease work in protest to the present dishonoring (as we see it) of the 1947 contract."

But the three-man board of inquiry, set up by Mr. Truman, couldn't see it that way. Its report, completed last Wednesday, but only released yesterday, noted that the strike took place two to three days after Lewis issued his letter of March 13. So the board's report observed:

"The stoppage of work followed so closely upon the receipt of the letter as to constitute cause and effect. This was more than a coincidence."

Lewis' letter, the report continued, "induced them(the miners) to take concerted action to stop work in the mines." Thus, in effect, the board said the stoppage was, indeed, a strike.

In his letter of yesterday, Lewis denied the walkout was a strike. He used the word only inside quotation marks. He implied to his union members that all they were doing was acting individually, at their own discretion, in protest at failure to receive a pension plan.

By nightfall there was no clear evidence of what the letter signified. Coal mine operators and owners in the field generally felt it cloaked a secret order to the miners to go back to work Monday.

Union officers in the field were almost as enigmatic as Lewis, but most indicated that there would be no resumption of work until the miners "get something" in the way of a promise of pensions.

The fact-finding report gave the Justice Department much to go on. Besides its declaration that Lewis caused the strike, it demolished a number of other contentions that Lewis made in the course of the dispute.

Junk Slot Machine Yields $10 Jackpot

Salisbury, Md., April 3 (AP).—Sim O. Zieger found a smashed-up slot machine on a Salisbury street—in three pieces. He took it home and called the police. While waiting, he poked around and found three quarters in the smashed coin receptacle.

The police gave the dismembered contraption a glance and told him to keep it. It was just a heap of junk now.

Zieger played with the "junk" a little longer. Out came the jackpot—$10.25. Also one slug.

Labor Act Charge Filed Against Idle Painters

A spokesman for the Union Painting Contractors Association yesterday said an unfair labor practices charge had been filed against the Painters Union Local 368 (AFL).

The charge, according to Attorney J. Robert Carey, was mailed to the Fifth Regional District National Labor Relations Board in Baltimore as the association's move in the four-day-old disagreement on wages.

The association said that about 1100 union painters went on strike Thursday and that only "about 10 per cent of them have returned to their jobs."

On the other hand, Josep Hillock, business agent of the union, said "at least 75 per cent" have gone back to work. He expressed optimism over a possible settlement, adding that union representatives were to meet with the association Monday.

Another union representative said most contractors had agreed to settle for wage increases shortly before the strike opened and estimated that "almost all" would settle before Monday.

The union gave the required 30-day strike notice and appeared before a conciliator of the Federal Meditation and Conciliation Service last Wednesday.

The current wage, the association said, is $1.95 an hour; the new request, $2.18. John W. Johnson, member of the association's negotiating committee, said hi sgroup had offered $2.06, based on Bureau of Labor statistics on cost-of-living increases.

The present contract has two years to run, but contains a wage reopening clause hinged to cost-of-living increases, Johnson said.

from Germany to accompany the paintings on the tour as an assurance of America's promise to return the works and not keep them as war booty.

Senator J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.) had also been thinking of the idea and on Thursday offered a bill to carry out the idea. Funs collected would be used for the benefit of German children through the United Nations International Children's Fund.

The bill won quick support in the Senate and yesterday similar backing appeared in the House.

Commented Representative Sol Bloom (D., N. Y.), also an art collector and Gallery visitor.

"There must be a million people who don't want the painting to go back yet—who want to see them. I suggested to the State Department weeks ago that a tour should be arranged so that people all over the country will have a chance to see them."

Other comment from the House side:

Representative Forest A. Harness (R., Ind.) "I wouldn't want to send the art treasures back right now. Maybe Old Joe would move in on them. We ought to hold them in safekeeping and let more of our people get a look at them."

Representative Joseph P. O'Hara (R., Minn.)—"As long as the art treasures are here, a lot of people would enjoy seeing them. I think the move to keep them on this side for a while is a constructive idea."

Representative Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.)—"My wife saw the paintings and thought they were marvelous. Let's send them around the country."

Representative Chet Holifield (D., Calif.)—"I see no reason to rush them back. From a standpoint of public interest, we ought to let more people here see them."

Representative Clifford R. Hope (R., Kans.)—"The treemndous interest shown by the large number of visitors to the Gallery makes it all the more important to exhibit the pictures in other cities."

Repreesntative John D. Lodge (R., Conn.)—"It's also important for us to establish what will happen to the art when it gets back to Germany. My mother went to see the exhibit. She said it was remarkable."

YOU'D THINK the Italian election campaign were being fought in these United States.

Americans of Italian descent are sending air mail letters to their relatives in Italy at the rate of 150,000 a day—100,000 more than ever before—begging them and warning them not to vote Communist.

Our State Department is making open efforts to influence the result, as it would not dare to do in an election at home.

We bet on the outcome, we gobble up news and views on the subject, we argue about the consequences if the Communists should "win" or "lose" on April 18, two weeks from today. And we are tempted to try to understand it in terms of our own election in November.

Looking at it through American glasses, we think we can see the election night crowds blowing tin horns as they watch the bulletins on the Piazza Venezia in Rome. And those of us who have been in New York on election night think we can picture a searchlight announcing the result from the top of the Victor Emmanuel monument—with a red beam if the Communists "win," a white beam if they "lose."

It isn't quite as simple or as American as all that.

The central issue is simple enough: Whether communism can dominate Italy and seize a key position of our Western World. But, in the American sense, no party in Italy can "win" or "lose."

There is such a multiplicity of parties that any democratic government has to be a coalition of parties, standing, roughly, for the same things.

A government in Italy (as in France or any other multiparty country that has the parliamentary system) is chosen by the Chamber of Deputies, according to the strength of party membership. A government in Italy is not elected for any fixed term, but falls if it does not have the support of the Chamber.

Can't Elect Premier

SO THE THING to look for April 18 is not whether the Italians will choose the Communist, Palmiro Togliatti, as their Premier—they can't do it and won't do it—but how many seats in the Chamber will be won by the Communists and their allies.

If the Communists and their allies should win a majority—which nobody believes they will—they would be strong enough to form a government of their own and put Togliatti in as Premier. If they should win 40 per cent or more of the seats, they probably would be strong enough to make life impossible for any non-Communist government, and therefore would have to be brought into a coalition which they would proceed to control. If they should win less than 30 per cent, the day would be saved for democracy in Italy; for then the non-Communist forces would be strong enough to form a cabinet coalition of their own.

Apart from the multiplicity of parties, there are many reasons why it is risky in the extreme to try to follow the Italian election process in American terms.

Italian civilization may be more than 3000 years old, but Italy as a nation is only half as old as the United States. Her experience in democracy is more limited in time and scope; she was deprived of it altogether for 20 Fascist years; she was ravaged, defeated, occupied and liberated in a terrible war.

Her people have known every form of tyranny through the ages, and although they are young and energetic in spirit they are old and wise in the ways of politicians.

An Age-Old Heritage

WE THINK of the Italians as democratic by instinct; as people who have made millions of our finest American citizens; yet the class system in Italy has age-old roots which have had neither the time nor the climate to develop in the United States.

An Italian artisan comes of a long line of artisans, far into past generations before there was such a thing as a parliamentary election. An Italian farmer has tilled his rocky soil as long as his family has records, and many of the wealthy families of medieval days are still wealthy and still powerful. Alongside them our industrial dynasties are mere upstarts.

It follows that class and professional loyalties are deeply embedded among Italian voters. They help to explain the party system which otherwise would seem bewildering here, where Republicans and Democrats come from almost every kind of background.

It follows, too, that where there are so many parties, with so many allegiances of habit or instinct or training, there are not apt to be so many independent or "floating" votes as in the United States.

Most of the present parties were born in the underground movement during the Nazi occupation in wartime. The party system took shape in postwar Italy in June, 1946, when about 22 million Italians voted for a constituent assembly to write a new constitution and set up a provisional government.

The Communists won 104 out of 555 seats in the Assembly, or about 19 per cent; the Socialists 115, or about 20 per cent; the Christian Democrats, the biggest middle-of-the-road party, 207, or 39 per cent; and all the rest—a mixture going all the way to a thinly concealed fascism on the right, 125, or about 22 per cent.

ITALIAN election facts:

About 27 million men and women will be eligible to vote.

They will vote for 574 members of the Chamber of Deputies and for 114 elected members of a 237-member Senate.

Each deputy will represent about 80,000 voters; each elected senator about 200,000.

Every man and woman over 21 is eligible to vote for a deputy; every man and woman over 25 for a senator.

The country is divided into 31 electoral districts, within which proportional representation is used to determine the results. This means that the make-up of the Chamber will not be known until April 19 or 20.

The Chamber and the Senate will then proceed to elect a President of the Republic. The first two ballots are by two thirds vote; if the result is still inconclusive, the third ballot is by simple majority.

The Socialists promptly split, half of their deputies allying themselves with the Communists and the other half forming independent groups determined to resist communism. Premier De Gasperi's power has been based on the Christian Democrats, with the help of independent Socialists and some of those on the right.

Leopard Denies Spots

Togliatti was one of the founders of the Italian Communist Party in industrial Turin, in the far-off days before Mussolini's march on Rome. He escaped and went to Russia for his training; he is now without question one of the ablest of Communists anywhere.

He protests again and again that Italian communism, if it comes to power, will be Italian and not Soviet in character, but the pretense fools few people abroad who have watched the performance of "national" Communist Parties elsewhere.

The Communists, of course, are the party to watch; and with them their Socialist allies under Pietro Nenni. Nobody knows exactly how or why the Communists have such a hold on Nenni that he will do their bidding, even to the extent of extinguishing democracy if he has the chance.

In earlier days Nenni was a good fighter for democracy. He was an exile in Paris, a journalist of distinction, throughout the Mussolini years. The Nazis captured him in 1940 and handed him over to Mussolini, who slapped him into prison until the liberation.

Today he cooperates with the Communists in a "popular front" of the familiar pattern; and if they ever take power in Italy it will be because Nenni, the professed believer in democratic processes, made it possible for them.

Two Socialist Hopes

LUCKILY, Nenni cannot claim to be the leader of all Italian Socialists. Another exile, an energetic young man named Guiseppe Saragat, leads a sizable bloc of Socialists who refuse to have any truck with communism. Saragat, too, was in Paris throughout the Italian Fascist years; he organized Italians in France into the French resistance movement during the war; he came back to Italy after the overthrow of Mussolini, but was arrested by the Fascists in the north and had a miraculous escape from prison in Rome.

Saragat, today, is one of the hopes of Italian democracy, and his movement is one that may attract independent voters who are workers and Marxists, yet who see the Communist danger to Italian liberties.

Another hope is Ivan Matteo Lombardo, independent Socialist allied to Saragat and cooperating in the present anti-Communist government. He came to Washington on a successful economic mission for the government last year, and is as much at home in America as in his own country.

Unlike Saragat, he stayed in Italy during the Mussolini period, promoting antifascism at great risk, somehow escaping arrest because of his protective coloration of being a small businessmen. During the last year of fascism he started rebuilding the Socialist Party, and today he is a man to watch.

Closely allied to Saragat and Lombardo on the democratic side is Randulfo Pacciardi, a World War I hero, a lawyer and journalist who was exiled by Mussolini. In the Spanish civil war he commanded the Garibaldi Brigade that helped rout the Fascists at Guadalajara. He returned to Italy after the liberation as leader of the Republican Party, and he proved the sincerity of his party's name by refusing to cooperate with any government until the monarchy was abolished.

Lost Farmer Support

NEXT TO Pacciardi, ostensibly in the middle of the road, comes the Christian Democratic Party, headed by Premier Alcide De Gasperi. This is the party that has the greatest support from the Vatican, and this is the hard core of the present courageous government.

The party has become much more conservative and clerical in the past year as it has lost support on the Left. It has lost much support and prestige among the tenant farmers, who have been lured away by Communist promises of land reform and better farming contracts.

De Gasperi is walking a tightrope between a Communist Left, which would destroy democratic Italy, and an assortment of Rightist parties, which would accomplish almost the same result if they had the chance.

De Gasperi's most dangerous threat on the Right is General Giovanni Messe, the Italian commander in Tunisia who was captured by the British. The general is not out in the open as a campaigner, but he leaves nobody in doubt that he would like to be the Italian De Gaulle. If the process of "polarization" —the drift to extremes of Left and Right—makes the same headway in Italy as in France, the magnetic Messe can become a

The Gallup Poll

Southern Voters 9-1 Against 'Rights' Bills

First of a series of reports on the attitude program, the Truman Administration and of Southern voters toward the civil rights other political matters affecting the 13 States.

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

SOUTHERN voters who have heard about President Truman's civil rights program are overwhelmingly opposed to it, and there is a feeling throughout the South that the Administration has not dealt fairly with their section.

How far the anti-Truman revolt will progress in the South remains to be seen; February polls found that the number of Southern whites favoring his nomination had dropped from 73 to 60 per cent. It was on February 2 that President Truman announced his civil rights program recommending a Federal anti-lynch law, action against poll taxes, a Federal FEPC law and other civil rights measures.

President Truman's civil rights message February 2 also called for creation of a civil rights division in the Justice Department and civil rights commissions; suffrage for residents of the District of Columbia; Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska; removal of restrictions barring some Orientals from citizenship; strengthening of existing laws to assure equal treatment to all residents, whether citizens or not, and prompt settlement of claims involving Japanese-Americans.

The new poll of the South was conducted among a cross-section of the white voting population. It found that 68 per cent had heard or read about the civil rights program. These people were asked:

How do you feel about Truman's civil rights program? Do you think Congress should or should not pass the program as a whole?

Their vote:

Should	6%
Should not	56
No opinion	6
	68%

The Southern voters were also asked:

Do you think the present Administration in ashington has dealt fairly, in general, with the South?

Their vote:

Yes	34%
No	51
No opinion	15

The main reasons given by those dissatisfied were that the Administration is trying to bring equality between whites and Negroes, that Washington has been attempting to interfere with States' rights and that the civil rights program was proposed without a full understanding of the situation in the South.

Outside the South, opinion on the civil rights program is favorable. Fifty-five per cent of those outside the South have heard about it, and their attitudes follow:

Congress should pass program	21%
Should not	15
No opinion	19
	55%

Overwhelmingly in favor of the program are Negroes outside the South. More than seven in 10 have heard about the program, and vote follows:

Pass the program	58%
Opposed	2
No opinion	11

Typical comments from Southern white voters polled on President Truman's civil rights program:

AGAINST

"Trying to stir up feeling between blacks and whites, and it is so unnecessary." Texas.

"Negroes should not be treated the same as whites. Should be considered two separate races and treated accordingly." Alabama.

"Truman is just playing for Northern votes at the expense of us Southerners." South Carolina.

FAVORABLE

"Truman is an honest man and tries to be square." Virginia.

"Truman wants the little man to live better. What's so wrong in that?" Virginia.

"It is the right of free men to vote free and to live in a democracy as free men." North Carolina.

NEUTRAL

"Two much politics mixed up in this—needs to be approached fairly and not as a political football." Texas.

The Real Airpower Dilemma Facing Congress

B-50s Now, or Jets by '51, Is Question

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

CONGRESS must make a highly important decision on military policy within the next several weeks, a tough choice between two courses of action.

The rub is not between President Truman's military preparedness proposals and a "super-duper" air force, as urged by some congressional leaders. That problem must be settled, but the question is not a military one.

If the decision is to shelve a stopgap draft and universal military training and boost air power appropriations, it will be a political and not a military judgment. Such action would be an easy way out of voting on conscription in an election year. Congress could not justify it on the advice of a single responsible defense official.

The military dilemma Congress faces is:

Should we triple appropriations for aircraft procurement and start the factories humming again, turning out improved versions of the wartime B-29 and other planes now available, or move more slowly, relying on our reserve of B-29s until a really satisfactory jet bomber is ready for mass production?

America's defense chiefs are divided on this question, so the decision is squarely up to Congress. Here are the pros and cons of the situation.

Shooting for the '50s

THE case for air power is set forth in the recent reports of the Presidential and Congressional air policy boards. They urged starting a big aircraft production program now, so as to have a modern, hard-hitting air force by the early 1950s when Russia may have stocks of A-bombs and planes capable of dropping them on the United States.

This is the viewpoint of Air Force chiefs. They stress the fact that money voted for plane production now will not put new-type bombers and fighters into USAF operating squadrons before 1951.

If we do not start building planes in sizable numbers now, they warn, we may find ourselves in an atomic war with an obsolete, second-rate air force.

Intelligence reports of Russian aircraft production conclude that the Soviets are building at least 40,000 warplanes a year and perhaps as many as 100,000. While some officials doubt these figures and depreciate the caliber of the USSR aircraft, there is no doubt the Russians are putting out many times the effort we are on air power.

Plane Quota 1800

YET the original 1949 budget provided for less than a thousand new planes for the Air Force. The Navy was allowed about a like number of smaller and less costly aircraft. President Truman's new preparedness program will boost next year's USAF plane program to close to 1600 at a cost of about 1.1 billion.

Top Air Force chiefs believe they should nearly double this figure if we are to have a modern fighting force by "T-Day." That is the date in 1952 which the Finletter Commission set as "Target Day"—the time when we must be ready for atomic war.

If granted the additional money, the USAF would order additional B-50s—an improved Boeing B-29—some more North American B-45 jet bombers and faster jet fighters. They are the types now emphasized in USAF orders.

AIR Force officials meet suggestions that they continue drawing B-29s out of storage in place of building more B-50s with two arguments. The latter—while essentially the same airplane as the super-fortresses which destroyed Japan's cities—have substantially greater range and speed.

They also warn against depleting our war reserves. Combat losses always are heavy and a "one-shot air force" is not of much value. Like thrifty Down East Yankees, they think it sinful to "live off principle."

Against these Air Force arguments for expansion, some top defense officials marshal other facts. They point out we have 2500 B-29s—1500 of them in storage. While granting that the B-50 will do things its older sister will not, they contend it still is a conventional type heavy bomber, and hence obsolete against jet fighters.

Piston Engines 'Dated'

THIS is the crux of the opposition stand. It has many supporters. Many top airmen, in fact, believe that the big bomber with piston engines is almost as dated as horse cavalry and battleships.

Recent writings of such authorities as Air Marshal Sir Arthur Harris, wartime commander of the RAF Bomber Command, and Gen. Hap Arnold, retired AAF chief, indicate they feel the day of the bomber they used so well is passing.

The American-British war with the Luftwaffe demonstrated that fighter cover is necessary to protect bomber formations when the enemy air opposition is numerous and possesses a real speed advantage over the bombers.

Today's B-29s, B-50s or B-36s, without fighter protection, it is argued, would be easy prey for 600-mile-an-hour enemy fight-

LONDON, April 3.—Britain, long a financier, of Latin American development, has started to sell out her investments there.

With her economy exhausted, she has been forced to dispose of some of her choicest plums in South America. London economists point out this has meant not only the loss of dividends from hard currency countries but also a loss of markets for British industrial products—things like British-built trams (street cars) for British-owned railways. Coincidentally, they said, the market was opening wider for the United States.

British selling in Latin America started before the last war, when Argentina acquired two of the biggest British capitalized enterprises in Buenos Aires—the Primitiva Gas Co. and the Anglo-Argentine Tramway Co. The tempo quickened after the war, when Latin American countries pressed to collect the huge debts Britain had piled up for food and raw materials.

Down One Fourth

BRITISH investments in South America dropped from a peak of one billion pounds (four billion dollars) in 1938 to approximately 750 million pounds (three billion dollars) today. This has played into the hands of nationalists in Latin America, and especially in Argentina, in their desire to get rid of foreign capital.

Uruguay has bought the British-owned Montevideo tramway, the Montevideo waterworks and the country's railways. All were paid for with part of the 17 million pounds (68 million dollars) that Uruguay accumulated here as a blocked balance during the war. And there was enough sterling left for Uruguay to buy about four million pounds (16 million dollars) worth of foreign bond issues on the London market.

Since the war, Argentina has paid 150 million pounds (600 million dollars for the British railways and one million pounds (four million dollars) for the Argentine and Smithfield packing plant facilities in Argentina and London.

The United Kingdom still has many million pounds invested in Latin American railways, port installations, streetcar systems, textile and sugar mills, packing houses, estates and lumber mills. But she has to liquidate still more of her wartime debts—Brazil's 60-million-pound sterling balance is the outstanding one—and to pay for the difference between her current imports from and exports to Latin America. Railways in Brazil and Cuba are next on the list of prospective sales of British investments.

Current Deficit High

NO estimate has been made of the total loss of invisible revenue the changed situation has meant for Britain, but the government's economic forecast for the first half of 1948 was a net deficit of 21 million pounds (84 million dollars) in invisible trade with the Western Hemisphere.

British financial sources believe that their country's economic straits will prevent any reinvestment in Latin America for some years.

Britain's Latchstring Still Out

BRITAIN has opened her doors to more than 325,000 refugees and displaced persons since the outbreak of World War II. In 1947 alone she gave refuge to nearly 33,000 homeless war victims, more than any other country in the world.

By the end of March, Great Britain had spent £129,800,000 ($519,200,000) on foreign nationals who cannot or will not return to their homes.

At the outbreak of war in 1939, some 80,000 refugees from Hitler had already found sanctuary in Britain. The majority of these have settled down in Britain, and many have become naturalized citizens.

Another 70,000 civilians fled to Britain in the early years of the war. Many of them chose to remain after VE-Day. In addition, 110,000 Poles and 300 Spanish Republicans who served with the British forces stayed in Britain after demobilization. If they decide to become British citizens, their service counts toward naturalization.

Jobs have already been found for 50,000 of the former Polish fighters and for 3000 of their 20,000 dependents. The rest are settling into jobs at the rate of 1000 a week.

Still Coming In

THEN there are the displaced persons from camps in Germany and Austria, known as European volunteer workers. By the end of 1947 Britain had welcomed almost 40,000 displaced persons (both workers and dependents) under organized schemes like "Westward Ho." Almost as many other displaced persons have entered Britain under private arrangements since the end of the war.

The doors are still wide open. More than 1200 volunteer workers arrive from European DP camps every week. Some 800 Jewish orphans found in Nazi concentration camps are being cared for by private individuals and voluntary societies. More than 5000 distressed persons from Europe and the Far East have been reunited with their relatives in Britain.

Most of the new arrivals are working on the land (15,000), in textile mills (7100) and in the coal mines (3700). Some are working in the iron and steel industries (640). Others, mainly women, have jobs in hospitals and similar institutions, as domestics.

Orientation Period

THE EUROPEAN workers share alike with their British colleagues. They receive the same pay, work under the same conditions, have the same food rations and are eligible for the same social insurance and other benefits.

New immigrants are taken to comfortable hostels and are given a few days to get their bearings. Until they have found jobs they like—it takes about 10 days—they receive free board and lodging, with a little "pin money" on the side.

Every arrival gets new clothes if he needs them, and a short, practical course in English gives him a working vocabulary. After five years every volunteer worker will be able to apply for naturalization on the same terms as other resident foreigners.

Single men and women without dependents are given preference under organized schemes of settlement, for Britain still has an acute housing shortage. However, 3000 working married couples have been admitted, as well as 1500 men with a total of 3500 nonworking dependents. Special accommodation has been found in every case for these families.

New Unrest Seethes in South Siam

By Stanley Swinton
Associated Press Staff Writer

SINGAPORE, April 3.—Southeast Asia has a new trouble spot in southern Siam.

Seven hundred thousand Malays live in that picturesque region. Their leaders claim they are being persecuted by their Siamese rulers.

Some of the Malays are demanding freedom from Siam and incorporation into the new Federation of Malaya, the cluster of nine self-governing sultanates in British Malaya.

Religion and language are the chief difficulties. The Malays are Moslems. The Siamese are Buddhists.

Malay leaders claim the Siamese suppress the Moslem faith and discourage use of the Malaya language in education and government offices.

Blames Underlings

SIAMESE Premier Khuang Aphaiwong blames the tension in southern Siam on maltreatment of the minority by corrupt or inexperienced officials. As a step toward appeasing the Malays, the Bangkok government appointed special Moslem commissioners for each of the four provinces where there is a large Malay population.

Despite this, a high British official, who asked that his name be withheld confirmed the "apparently serious oppression of the Malay minority." Malay refugees have been streaming into northern Malaya from Siam. Siam sent police reinforcements into the area.

Villages Burned

THE conservative Straits Times of Singapore said "there have been ugly reports of more violent forms of repression in the Malay districts—the wholesale burning of Kampongs (villages) and other brutal behavior by Siamese police."

The Siamese government has arrested Haji Salong, generally acknowledged leader of the Malay minority, on charges of participating in a political movement to annex the southern provinces to British Malaya. A mass meeting of Singapore Malays recently asked the United Nations to investigate the border problem.

Scars of 1944 Are Still Raw

'New' Language Taxes Alsatians

By Sidney Keller

BITSCHWILLER, April 3.—The shooting stopped here three years ago, but the war is not over yet in Alsace-Lorraine.

After five years of Nazi occupation, a million French children in this region speak German as a mother tongue and still find French a difficult foreign language.

Half a million homes that bear the wounds of fire and bombardment are still waiting to be rebuilt. A hundred thousand families are still hoping irrationally for the return of their menfolk, taken off to Germany as far back as eight years ago.

A thousand wooden military bridges in these border departments are still waiting to be replaced by permanent structures. Now a series of floods has added to the woes of this long-suffering territory.

Reel Rewinds

IN 1944 and 1945, I campaigned through this region with the American Seventh Army. I returned here recently on a tour of flood damage, and my feeling was: "This is where I came in."

For two days we rode through hundreds of woebegone villages from Epinal over to Colmar and from there across to Strassburg. The Vosges Department, the worst hit, was about one quarter submerged. The damage to public works, industries, farms and homes in all eight eastern departments was estimated at about eight billion francs.

We made dozens of stops in muddy little wayside hamlets and talked to stolid men and women in wooden shoes. The flood was the least of their worries. What most of these people wanted to know was when reconstruction was going to start and when they could go back to peacetime living.

At Illhausen, where every third house was in ruins, a group of little girls greeted us with flowers and sang for us. "La France est belle," they sang. "France is beautiful." There was added poignancy in their song, because, although they sang in French, not one of these little girls could speak that language without great difficulty.

This territory has changed nationally so many times that the only permanent language its inhabitants have been able to maintain is a kind of local dialect of Germanic origin with French trimmings.

German Permitted

IN 1870 Alsace and Lorraine were annexed by Germany. In 1918 they were French again. In 1940 Germany reannexed them. And in 1945 they became French again.

When this territory was reannexed to the Reich in 1940, all French language newspapers were abolished. Anyone heard speaking French was subject to imprisonment or deportation. It even became a prison offense to wear a French beret.

The French way of handling these problems today is in striking contrast with the German methods. There has always been a German-speaking population here, even under French administration. France still permits German language publications to be printed. It raises no objections to people who choose to conduct their affairs in that language. But French is the language in the schools and an intensive cultural program has been launched to get people thinking like Frenchmen again.

The French theory is that what people think is more important than what language they speak. Thus many of the daily broadcasts made by the French government radio are in German.

Some newspapers are aiding the transition, however, by printing bilingual editions. Editors told me the solution was not without its difficulties, because they make it a practice not to repeat their news in both languages. Their main guide as to which news to print in which language is to guess at the age of each reader group.

Articles about politics are usually printed in German, with no attempt to alter the fixed habits of the older generation. Articles about French colonial affairs and the French armed forces are usually in French, as well as sports news, theater and radio schedules, announcements of social gatherings and the like.

Oxcart Progress

AT ARCHETTES we passed some work crews repairing flood damage. They were using an ox-drawn cart and several handbarrows. Reconstruction appeared to have limped along at the same oxcart pace.

Epinal, department capital of the Vosges, looked as though the war was still on. The railroad station and buildings for blocks around were the same heaps of rubble the American Seventh Army saw when it passed through in 1944.

The pattern had its bright spots, of course. In one town there was a newly rebuilt factory. At Igney we passed a block of freshly constructed homes. At Thaon some of the war's grime had been covered with cheerful paint; a small housing development was in progress and a local factory was getting a new roof.

But these bright spots were remarkable for their rarity. It seemed also that factories were being rebuilt first.

La Bresse, high in the Vosges Mountains, looked more like a cemetery than a town. The streets were lined solid with neat, rectangular piles of rubble, each with a house number painted on it. These had once been the homes of 5000 Frenchmen. The destruction of La Bresse was an act of reprisal by the Germans. The whole town was leveled in less than an hour.

Grazier Seeks Water By Trailing Birds

SYDNEY (AP).—Using an airplane, W. Gall, an Australian sheepgrower, plans to follow birds to their secret water holes during droughts.

Gall's 60,000 acre property, Langawirra Station, is 60 miles northeast of Broken Hill, New South Wales. He says he will also search his huge property by air for new pastures when feed is scarce.

Australian water birds have puzzled many graziers during droughts. While sheep died for want of water, swans and ducks have been seen overhead, flying to a secret water rendezvous.

Los Alamos Snaps Out of Slump

Hemmed in by mountains and Indian reservations, Los Alamos is on a sun-baked mesa that would give a landscape architect gray hairs. But the AEC has plans to make it an attractive home site, which include moving the "atomic factory" out of the heart of the city, where it is a menace, and across a canyon

By Stephen White

LOS ALAMOS, N. Mex., April 3.—Now that the information is out of date, it can be told. The Los Alamos Laboratories, heart and brain of the entire atom bomb project, were on the verge of collapse less than a year ago.

It can be told now only because it is no longer true. Los Alamos has fought its way back toward the commanding position it held during the war.

When the war ended, the great scientists began to leave for the calm and quiet of their universities. The men who remained were beginning to roll once more when the Bikini tests came along. The scientists were packed off to the mid-Pacific, and again Los Alamos slowed to a walk.

Finally, the long fight between proponents of military and civilian control of the atom kept Los Alamos in a state of suspended animation for a year. Most of the workers were planning to leave if Los Alamos came under military control. They were no more willing to remain under Army domination than a buck private who had enough points for discharge.

By last spring, morale here was at the vanishing point. Research was almost at a standstill. Living conditions were abominable, and complaints took up more time than work.

'Big Names' Return

THE turning point came with the appointment of a civilian commission. Then, last summer, came the unexpected return of many of the great scientists, such men as Enrico Fermi, J. Robert Oppenheimer, Hans Bethe, John von Neumann, Edward Teller and a dozen others. Many of them had sworn they would never do weapons work again, but time had changed their minds.

Their return was a tremendous psychological lift. More than that, they provided the leadership that had been lacking. "We will run for a year on the momentum they provided," one of the scientists here says, and most of them will be back again this year.

The upturn has been maintained. A steady improvement in living conditions, and the assurance of better conditions ahead, have improved morale.

No Room to Stretch

LOS ALAMOS is a city of contrasts. In the distance are the beautiful snow-capped Sangre de Cristo Mountains, in the foreground is a city of bare brown earth, jerry-built houses and trailers and—dominating it all—the sprawling atom factories.

Los Alamos grew up in a hurry. There was no time to plant trees or seed lawns, and there was no particular need for it; the singleness of purpose of the men who worked here during the war made everything else extraneous.

But now it has become difficult to recruit new workers for the laboratories. The Atomic Energy Commission has set itself the immediate task of making Los Alamos a city in which a worker would be happy to live.

The city is desperately crowded for space, but Indian reservations on all sides keep it hemmed in. Private capital cannot buy land either on the bomb reservation or the Indian reservation.

More than 10 per cent of the people live in substandard homes, crowded together on the bare mesa. Another 50 per cent are in temporary homes or barracks.

The commission is rushing to completion 700 permanent units this year. In a town of 8000, that will go a long way, but in the next few years the town is expected to grow 50 per cent. The construction, however, will not end until Los Alamos is almost completely rebuilt.

'Factory' to Move

EACH housing site is being laid out as an integrated unit, with schools, playgrounds, shopping centers and all other conveniences in the immediate area. Another plan calls for relocation of the laboratories. They are squarely in the center of the town, now, and constitute a menace. The new site will set them off across a canyon.

Housing sites are laid out so that children will have no streets to cross on their way to school. (In one site students can bicycle downhill all the way to school.)

One unit contains a 1000-seat theater so spacious that there can be no treading on toes; a bowling alley and poolroom that are the epitome of plush; barber shops and beauty parlors that outdo even the bowling alley; and buildings for the town radio station and the town newspaper.

The legal and political status of the residents is up in the air. A judge has ruled, in a divorce case, that since Los Alamos is a Federal reservation, residence here does not constitute residence in New Mexico. But the New Mexico Legislature has voted the residents the franchise.

Los Alamos has almost as many votes as the rest of Sandoval County, and county politicians will be watching the primary. If the city splits more or less evenly between the two parties, probably nothing will be said. If one or the other party makes a sweep, however, there might be a challenge of the residents' right to vote.

Hive of Youngsters

THE RESIDENTS have no voice in governing their city. They were offered the opportunity last December and have spent several months in arguing the form of government they should have. At present, a committee is drawing up a charter, which must be approved by the residents and then by the commission. The AEC will retain veto power.

Since nobody owns land here, there will be no real estate tax for the city government to spend. The cost of maintaining the city will be added to rents. Funds will be provided by Congress through the AEC and will be returned to the Treasury as the rents are paid.

One of the city's major problem will be schools. Whatever fears there may have been that working on the bomb would cause sterility can be forgotten. Los Alamos has produced children at a rate that can be matched nowhere else in the country. Today the largest age group in the city is 2 years old or less.

The lower grades of the school system are jammed, and the upper grades are practically empty. Each year sees a shift upward, so the school system has to change with its students. By 1952 almost one in every four persons in Los Alamos will be attending school.

Just Making Bombs

LOS ALAMOS is a peculiar combination of laboratory and factory. Each bomb is a laboratory triumph, and it is wrapped in secrecy that makes even Hanford and Oak Ridge seem open cities by comparison.

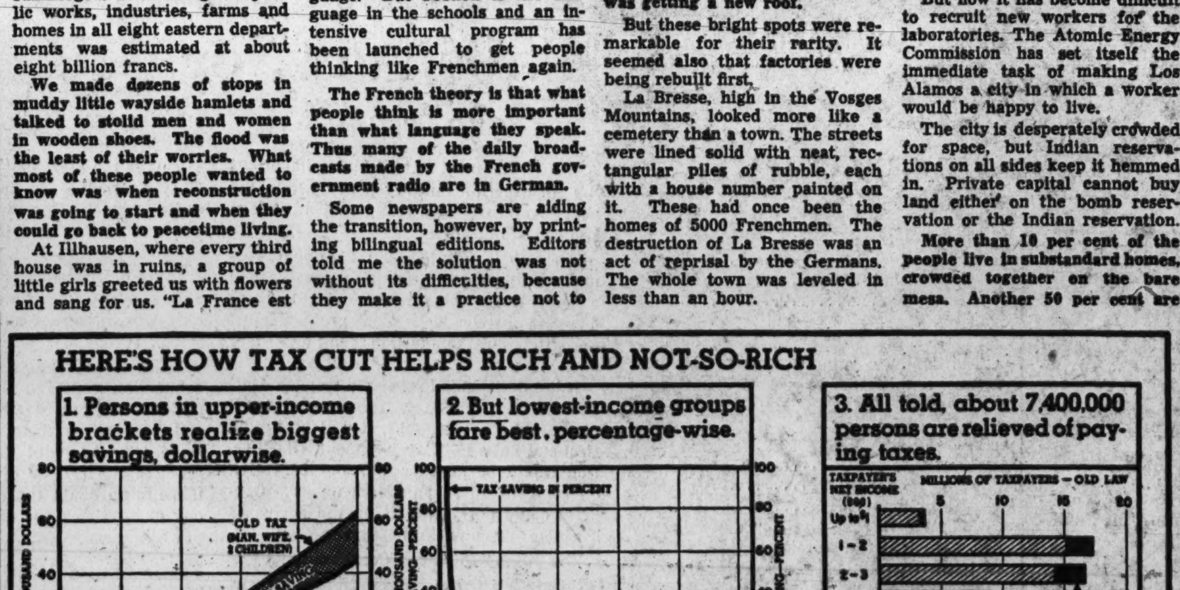
"Sure, we're making bombs," says Dr. John H. Manley, assistant to Dr. Norris Bradbury, technical director here, and also secretary to the general advisory committee of the Atomic Energy Commission. "You don't think we are just letting that plutonium and uranium lie around. I doubt if Congress would let us."

But that is virtually the extent of information available here on America's bomb production.

Pearl Diving Resumed

Singapore (AP).—Malayan pearl divers soon will be back at work off the northwestern Australian coast. Permission has been granted by the Australian government for 12 divers to enter the country, the first return since the war.

HERE'S HOW TAX CUT HELPS RICH AND NOT-SO-RICH



BY OVERRIDING the President's veto, Congress helped out taxpayers in three ways:

1. Exemptions are raised from $500 to $600 a person.

2. Husbands and wives can split their incomes for tax purposes.

3. The tax on income after deductions and exemptions is reduced by 12.6 per cent on the first $2000, by 7.4 per cent on the next $134,000, and 5 per cent on any income above that.

Here's the effect in dollars and cents:

A married man with two children who earned a net income of $2400 (after allowable deductions like interest, contributions, etc.) would pay $76 under the old law. Under the new, his four exemptions at $600 each would take him out of the taxpayer class. If his income were $10,000, he'd save $501; his tax would drop from $1862 to $1361. If his income were $100,000, his tax would drop from $62,301 to $45,642.

The second chart shows how the tax saving fluctuates in percentages. Note that the savings run to 100 per cent for the very low-income recipients, to 25.1 per cent for the $6000-a-year level, 35.8 per cent for the $25,000 level and 26.7 per cent for $100,000. The chart does not include million-dollar-a-year men; their saving is 8.3 per cent.

The third chart shows the number of persons who paid taxes under the old law and those who will be relieved by the new.

(Taxpayers' net income in the chart refers to taxable net income after deductions, but before personal exemptions.)

Not a Happy Army Day

If War Came Soon, We'd Give Ground

By Clarke Beach
Associated Press Staff Writer

DEFENSE chiefs, after telling Congress that they believe war in the near future is clearly possible, estimate that if it came soon we would suffer serious setbacks in its first stages.

The Army sees no cause for rejoicing on Army Day, this coming Tuesday. Its Chief of Staff, Gen. Omar Bradley, says its forces in this country could provide "no more than a handful of combat troops for the defense of the United States or for emergency employment overseas."

Privately, informed officials say that if Russia chose to push her enormous army across Europe she could be on the Atlantic within 60 days. True, she would have our atomic bomb to reckon with, but both Defense Secretary Forrestal and Air Chief of Staff Spaatz say that the bomb would not be decisive. An enemy's fighting power would not be crushed, they say, until we had conquered its army in a full-scale campaign by our Air Force, Army and Navy.

Russia's Risks

RUSSIA would have to contend eventually with our superior industrial and scientific resources, and with our technically trained manpower. The defense chiefs hope this would deter Russia from launching an attack.

They hope also that if we rapidly increase the size of our armed forces about 25 per cent through selective service, the Russians would hesitate to risk war. Our forces then would be sufficient, they believe, to withstand the first shock.

Their theory is that if the Russians wanted to attack but were convinced they could not win a knockout in the first round, they might not attack at all, knowing the chances they would take in a long war with this country.

What would be the shape of war if it came?

"We will be attacked first," says General Bradley. "I cannot conceive of our starting a war by offensive action."

The enemy would seek air bases as near our shores as possible—perhaps landing airborne forces in Alaska to wrest airfields from our small detachments there. Labrador, Newfoundland and Canada might be approached from the east.

Mass armies might advance against our forces in Korea. On the European continent they might begin closing in toward the Atlantic, to deny us the use of airbases there and to wipe out the support we might receive from 250 million potential allies in the free countries.

Scattered 'Strength'

WE HAVE 101,000 troops in Europe—96,000 in Germany and Austria, 5000 in Trieste. There is a battalion of Marines on ships in the Mediterranean.

Only a small proportion of the scattered Army men are trained and organized for combat. Most of the combat troops are trained only for constabulary duty.

In this country we have 248,000 Army personnel, of whom 54,000 are combat troops—the "mobile striking force." There are seven Marine combat battalions in the United States.

In Alaska we have 7000 Army troops, in Hawaii 9000, in the Caribbean 14,000 and in Japan, Korea, the Philippines, the Ryukyus, the Marshalls and the Bonins 127,000. The Marine Corps has four combat battalions in the western Pacific.

The Russians have well over 100 divisions mobilized and "in combat form," says Forrestal. The nations which Russia dominates, he believes, have 75 divisions. We have manpower equivalent to seven or eight divisions in Europe, 2 1-3 in this country.

Describing our military position March 17, Secretary of State Marshall said:

"I think in our present situation we have a hollow shell. Most of our strength is on the perimeter, and that is no place for strength except at the twelfth hour, and even then you have to have something behind you."

Submarine Siege

IF WE took the initiative after a war started, we would seek to establish air bases near the enemy to bomb his cities, so that his forces could be pinned at home. In such a case "we would be faced with either of two very bad alternatives," says Dr. Karl T. Compton, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Universal Military Training.

Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, told the Senate Armed Forces Committee March 22:

"One would be to occupy, defend and operate advance bases with not enough professional soldiers left behind to train the great numbers of reserves and replacements which would be needed in a desperate struggle; or else to put first emphasis on quick training and lose the advantage of quick action against the enemy while at the same time sitting to take whatever he delivers."

One thing likely would be severe submarine punishment to our Navy and merchant marine.

"The Russians now have more than 250 operating submarines," says Navy Secretary Sullivan, "and undoubtedly are capable of producing on short notice a large number of the latest design, vastly superior to any operated by the German navy during World War II."

"At the beginning of World War II," he recalled, "the Germans had less than 50 operating submarines, and yet they very nearly won the Battle of the Atlantic."

Bases Too Distant

WE WOULD be able to make long-range bombing attacks with the improved B-29s.

This plane, says Air Secretary Symington, "utilizing the most modern development of the refueling technique which we developed some years ago, can take off in limited operations from such points as Alaska or Labrador, bomb any part of Russia, and return to American bases such as the Philippines, Okinawa, Alaska or Labrador."

This would not be decisive strategic bombing, however. That involves unremitting, two-way shuttle attack, giving the enemy no time to put out his fires or restore his defenses. Such bombing must be from bases no farther than 2000 miles from the objective, say the air chiefs, and much closer, if possible, to give the bombers fighter protection.

Small island bases are inadequate for such mass operations. One major base would require 375,000 ground troops for its defense and support, according to General Bradley.

Even if we had the manpower to seize and hold such bases, moreover, our Air Force is not large enough for sustained operations. General Spaatz says we could not continue an all-out attack for more than a month "because our support in depth is inadequate."

'Haven' for Enemy

A ONE-WAY, semisuicidal bombing raid on almost any part of the world is always possible, but Army Secretary Royall says it is unlikely we would attempt such an operation because the limited results would not warrant it.

"One-way bombing would be much more probable on the part of the enemy than on our part," Royall told the Senate committee. "He would know that planes would have a better chance of landing without a crash in some of our many fine airfields. He would know his captured crews would be well-treated in our country."

Defense chiefs are not discounting the possibility of such an attack. General Bradley says that the antiaircraft, antiparachute and security troops stationed at our atomic energy plants and certain other vital facilities "may well be our first line of defense in a D-Day of the future."

General Spaatz has revealed, moreover, that within the past few months the Air Force has been given additional duties involving defense against sneak attacks. They include "augmented radar and warning systems, several projects dealing with classified data, and the security or base areas where such projects are being conducted."

Capital's His Favorite Haunt

Ghostwriter's a Kindly Spook

By Arthur Edson
Associated Press Staff Writer

PRESIDENT Daniel Marsh of Boston University has been scared by a ghost.

This ghost is a little man who lurks behind typewriters. He builds speeches or articles to be spoken or signed by some one else. He is the ghost writer.

In a recent speech Dr. Marsh tore into the man who hires a ghost.

"Dishonest . . . morally threadbare," said the doctor. "Too lazy or dumb to write his own speeches or messages . . . The public is not justified in putting any confidence in what he says."

Ghost writers get around. Take sports.

A baseball player hits a home run every three days and becomes a very important person. Everyone yearns to know what he has to say.

But he has nothing to say.

So a writer is hired to help him say it. Enough sports writers have been Babe Ruth to start a baseball team, or maybe even a fourth party.

Great Caesar's Ghost

GHOSTWRITING is nothing new. Aulus Hirtius helped Julius Caesar write his Commentaries. Seneca was a mouthpiece for Nero. Demosthenes turned out tailormade talks for less gifted orators.

George Washington, who was a soldier, not a writer, is supposed to have had help on his farewell address. And, according to the Literary Digest of July 10, 1932, Mark Twain once was a ghost. He helped write the autobiography of Ulysses S. Grant.

Dr. Marsh says that speakers should be compelled by law to say who wrote their addresses. Yet the ghost has his defenders.

Take this from the late Gen. Hugh Johnson, who became a columnist:

"I see no fault in national leaders—whether George Washington with Alexander Hamilton or Franklin Roosevelt with Tommy Corcoran—using ghost writers. After all, the speaker makes their words his own and is thereafter responsible for them."

A Prolific Specter

IT'S HERE in talkative Washington, where you can hear a speech at the drop of a Congressman's nay, that the practice has thrived.

The late Charley Michelson was the most famous ghost of all. He was a one-man speech factory, and a good one, for Democratic bigwigs in New Deal days.

Even General Johnson, no slouch of a syllable slinger himself, turned to Michelson for help.

"He is the only man who ever wrote any part of a speech for me," said the general, "and the part he wrote was the best."

But ghost writing has had its embarrassing moments.

The Library of Congress has a reference bureau which collects facts for Congressmen. Sometimes the Congressmen pass on these facts without bothering to work them over.

Which explains the strange doings of March 22, 1938, in the Senate.

Senator Byrd (D., Va.) got up, made a speech. An hour later Edward Burke, then a Senator from Nebraska, came in and started talking.

Same topic. Same speech.

Why?

Same ghost.

Looking Back Three Years . . .

Yanks Were a Beautiful Army Then

Maj. Gen. F. L. Parks, chief of the Army's public information division, has suggested to former war correspondents that Army Day, April 6, would be a good time to reprint their favorite stories of the recent fighting. Edward T. Folliard, who was war correspondent for The Washington Post at the Battle of the Bulge and the crossing of the Rhine, has chosen the following story. He likes it, he said, because "it is not about the mechanics of war but about the men." It was first published in The Washington Post three years ago, March 26, 1945.

These 14 and 15-year-old Germans, captured by the Yank at right just about the time this story was written, were just as confident as the oberleutnant that Hitler would produce a hole ace and still win the war

By Edward T. Folliard

WITH THE United States Ninth Army East of the Rhine, March 25.—So fast is this war moving that the Rhine already is what they call a rear area. The fighting is about 7 miles beyond it in the direction of Berlin, and along the river bank today it was possible to see grimy GIs trying their luck for fish.

The censorship "stop" on the two divisions of the Ninth Army that made the moonlight crossing of the Rhine early yesterday was removed this evening and it can now be said that they were the Seventy-ninth and the Thirtieth.

The Thirtieth, commanded by Maj. Gen. Leland S. Hobbs of Washington, D. C., is the great outfit that spearheaded the breakthrough at St. Lo in Normandy last summer. Right now it is moving as fast as its men can travel.

Waiting for Capture

WITH TWO other war correspondents, The Washington Post reporter caught up with one of its assault battalions today in the village of Friederichsfeld, about 3 miles east of the Rhine.

A doughboy was just coming down the road with a half-dozen German prisoners, a very sorry lot indeed. They were members of an antiaircraft or flak battery that had been guarding the Ruhr Valley, and they were visibly happy to be alive and out of the war. They said they had been hiding in a cellar for three days, hoping the Americans would come along and capture them.

One of them, a partly bald individual in his late 40s or early 50s, kept smiling while we were holding a roadside interview. He said he was an Austrian from Vienna.

Asked if he was a Nazi, he uttered a vehement "Nein, nein!" He said that the Germans had put him into the army for what they called educational purposes back in 1940, and had kept him in the Ruhr Valley ever since with his flak battery.

He said that lately the battery hadn't been given any ammunition and so was unable to oppose the attacks of the United States Eighth Air Force and the RAF.

Rear Echelon Lad

A PRISONER of an entirely different stripe appeared just after this. He had been riding on the hood of a jeep, his hands locked over his head, while an American soldier rode along beside the driver guarding him. The German was a natty figure in officer's uniform, and it turned out he also was nasty.

He said he was Oberleutnant Heinrich Nehmer, 32, an artilleryman and holder of the Iron Cross, second class. He had been found hiding in a foxhole in a nearby field, well behind his outfit, but he wanted it known that he was not glad that for him the war was over.

"I would rather be back with my German comrades," he told John McCormac of the New York Times, who was acting as interpreter.

Asked whether he thought Germany had lost the war, Oberleutnant Nehmer said he did not think so, and insisted that Germany's leaders still had something up their collective sleeve. He glowed as he said this, just as tough Nazis do in the movies.

He Kept the Pup

THERE WAS NO END to the parade of prisoners moving toward the rear. No sooner had hard-boiled Heinrich disappeared than a fresh batch came down the road kicking up a cloud of dust. Some of these were Luftwaffe troops who had been put into the line, and they were pretty good looking soldiers.

A German in front was carrying a little brown dachshund puppy and no American had the heart to take it away from him. That is saying something, for this is really a dog-loving army, one that has been gathering pets all the way from North Africa.

Bringing up the end of the line of prisoners were four Germans carrying a litter. Stretched out on it was one of their comrades, a bloody bandage around his forehead. American medics took the wounded man and hurried him to a first aid station.

The Rhine River, which has sent German poets and composers into ecstasies, is narrow in this sector, narrower even than the Potomac at Georgetown.

Its banks are a chaos of shell holes from Friday night's record barrage and the villages beyond it hardly have anything left on which to hang a white flag. Nevertheless, the villagers are coming back in and the hausfrauen are doing what they always do, grabbing their brooms and attacking the debris on their doorsteps.

How these people survived the fury of the American artillery and the bombings is one of the mysteries of the war.

A Bit of Prophecy

SO FAR THE ADVANCE beyond the Rhine has been at infantryman's speed. One of these days the heavy armor will come through and then you will hear of spectacular gains such as marked the advance across France last summer.

This doesn't mean that the Germans have quit cold. Lieut. Col. Stewart of Newton, Mass., a battalion commander of the Thirtieth Division, told us what was happening when he came back from the line today, dirty and bearded after 36 hours of steady fighting.

"They fight all right," he said, "but when they see they are cut off they surrender."

The armor, when it gets going, will be able to cut them off in hundreds of square miles, whereas now it is a case of cutting off small patches in a wood or a field.

A French war correspondent and veteran of the fighting in 1940, Pierre Frederix, stood on the east bank of the Rhine today and watched the flow of trucks, jeeps and weapons across the newly-made bridges.

"You Americans are colossal!" he exclaimed. "I was at Sedan in 1940 and saw the German breakthrough. We French had never seen anything like Rommel's army that smashed us there. Nobody walked. Everything was on wheels. It was the greatest army in the world.

"But this American Army has equipment the Germans never dreamed of. You have crossed the Rhine faster than they crossed the Meuse. It is beautiful!"

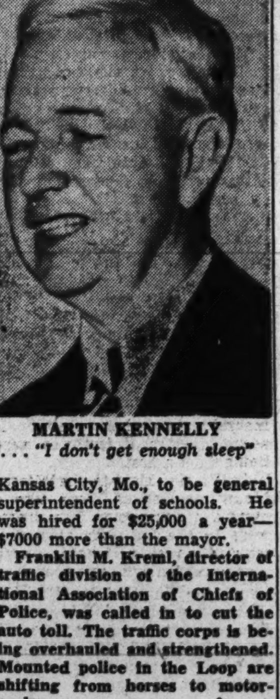
Kennelly Admits 'Progress'

Chicago Pays Cash Under Businessman

By William Conway
Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

CHICAGO, April 3.—How does a businessman fare as mayor of a big city?

Martin H. Kennelly, who used to run a storage and trucking firm, is rounding out his first year as Chicago's head man. He came in last April 15 at the end of a 20-year reign by politicians—Big Bill Thompson, Anton Cermak, Ed Kelly. He called for "orderly action," walked into his office and left the door open.



MARTIN KENNELLY
. . . "I don't get enough sleep"

"I think we are making some progress," says Kennelly.

Let's see what has happened since this big, methodical man of 60 went to work.

What about crime?

The top structure of the police department was remodeled. Fourteen new administrative posts were created. One aim was to provide round-the-clock supervision. This was the first step in a general reorganization of the force that will take two or three years.

Expensive 'Help'

VIRGIL W. PETERSON, operating director of the Chicago Crime Commission, an independent agency, says:

"There has been less of the so-called system of protected privilege. There has been a definite decrease in certain phases of organized crime. There has been a decrease in revenue from gambling.

"There still is plenty of crime. But there has been improvement."

Herold C. Hunt came from Kansas City, Mo., to be general superintendent of schools. He was hired for $25,000 a year—$7000 more than the mayor.

Franklin M. Kreml, director of traffic division of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, was called in to cut the auto toll. The traffic corps is being overhauled and strengthened. Mounted police in the Loop are shifting from horses to motorcycles.

Kennelly told city department heads to get rid of "deadwood." Some 400 city workers have been dropped.

A bureau of purchases was set up to centralize buying. (Other cities have saved millions this way.) It took a 12-million-dollar bond issue to do it, but city buying was put on a cash basis.

Salvaging Slums

KENNELLY'S No. 1 dream—housing—still is on paper. But a bond issue has raised 30 million dollars for this task. Half of that is for razing slums. The rest is for low-rent homes for displaced slum folks.

The city will clear slum land and offer it at low cost to private builders. The builders will put up apartments. The mayor figures the project will draw 125 million dollars in private capital.

Kennelly, a Democrat, has shunned the role of political boss. Party chiefs asked him to run for Governor. He declined.

How does keeping house for 3,700,000 men, women and children affect a businessman?

"From the standpoint of personal comfort it's pretty rugged," he says. "I put in about 16 hours a day on the average. There have been no vacations. Some nights I don't get enough sleep. But I feel fine."

Army Aids Organization

Industry Creating War Service Units

By Rowland Evans, jr.
Associated Press Staff Writer

ROUND pegs in round holes and square in square—that's how the Army plans to place technical specialists if another war comes.

In the last war expert welders often drove trucks, truck drivers tested radio tubes, tube testers strung barrage balloons. In the next, if a system already operating is successful, civilian tube testers will find themselves testing tubes and truck drivers will drive trucks.

The Army's Affiliation Program (AFPRO) is based on the idea of civilian organizations (steel companies, automotive and aircraft industries, chemical plants, police departments, laundries, etc.) "sponsoring" units of the Organized Reserve Corps.

ORC is one of three components of the Army of the United States. The other two are the Regular Army and the National Guard.

Already 350 units have been activated and the Army has signed more than twice that number of agreements with civilian organizations. Units run in size from 5 or 6 to 1000 men. Their job in war will be to support the combat arms of the ground and air forces.

Small-Scale Trial

AFPRO has been tried before but never on anything like today's scale. In the last war some signal battalions were sponsored by telephone companies; more than 70 general and evacuation hospitals by hospitals and schools; truck and transportation units by the American Trucking Association; railway operating and shop battalions by railroads.

To show how the new system works, here's the story of the Mahoning Valley Builders Association, Youngstown, Ohio:

Encouraged by the Army, the association decided it would like to sponsor a reserve outfit. It polled employes and they liked the idea, too. The Army came in and organized an engineer construction battalion.

It consists of 26 officers, 2 warrant officers and 862 enlisted men. If war should come, the battalion would be called to active duty to construct roads and railroads, rehabilitate ports and build hospitals. Its members would be doing the same kind of work they're doing now, under the same bosses and with the same associates.

The Better Business Bureau of Milwaukee, the Chicago Police Department and a firm called Private Investigators, Inc., are a few of the organizations sponsoring counterintelligence units. International Business Machines has set up a machine records unit, Bell Telephone of New Jersey a signal company, and so on.

Theoretically these and similar affiliated units can step into the Army's service and supply business at the first hint of a war.

Index of Liability

WHAT'S to keep sponsoring industries from affiliating themselves right out of business if war does come?

The Army says sponsors are warned not to tie up too many employes in an affiliated unit. It says that if war comes even key industries are going to lose some first-class help. By affiliating one or two units with the reserve now, it says, employers will have an idea how many workers they're going to lose.

Training is routine and may (but doesn't have to) include a 15-day period in the field, or periodic armory training. Reservists in AFPRO cannot be called to more than 15 days a year active duty unless a national emergency is declared by Congress.

At its peak World War II strength the Army had more than 20,000 service units. It says that AFPRO will result "initially" in the affiliation of 2500 "key service-type units." It takes from 15 to 20 service unit men to support every soldier in action.

Girls Cashing In GI Sweet Talk

BRISBANE—(AP).—More than 1,000,000 American fighting men passed through Brisbane during World War II; and left behind with the local girls a trail of one-dollar bills bearing touching love messages.

Today, as sentiment fades, more and more of these bills are being presented to banks, which pay out six shillings two pence in Australian currency on each.

Some girls, however, are shying clear of the banks and selling their dollars quietly at up to double the official rate.

Loose Talk

Governor Dewey spoke recklessly when he charged last week that "the policies of our country today are dominated by dozens of military men who by instinct and training think only in terms of war." It is an inappropriate remark judged by either meaning that may be drawn from its ambiguity. Mr. Dewey's assumption that all military men "think only in terms of war" was contradicted in effect by General Eisenhower in his testimony on the proposal to revive Selective Service and institute universal military training. The former Chief of Staff made it unmistakably clear that he was thinking in terms of peace—peace that can be maintained only if the United States and other friendly democratic powers have sufficient strength to prevent the spread of aggression.

It is also wrong to say that the United States foreign policy is shaped by men who are thinking in terms of war. Does Mr. Dewey refer to Secretary of State Marshall? If so, he lacked the candor to make his meaning plain. If the charge was directed at Secretary Marshall, it has been refuted by the overwhelming votes for the Marshall Plan in both houses of Congress. The Marshall Plan, of course, is the key to the foreign policy adhered to by the Secretary of State and the Administration. And it is preeminently a peace policy.

We think that President Truman's wish stated in his address at William and Mary College, that all the world could be good neighbors, comes closer to expressing the attitude of the United States than Governor Dewey's thoughtless accusation. By misrepresenting the foreign policy of his own country—a policy overwhelmingly approved by both major parties—Mr. Dewey has certainly added nothing to current understanding of world affairs or to his own stature.

Atom Control Failure

At Lake Success on Monday, eight of the eleven members of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission agreed to drop further consideration of the Soviet Union's proposals for international control of atomic energy. In their judgment, these proposals did not constitute "an adequate basis" for control or for the elimination of atomic weapons from national armaments. On Tuesday a key committee of the U. N. Commission, the Committee on Control, adjourned indefinitely—giving up as hopeless the attempt to work out an organizational structure for the proposed International Atomic Agency. On Wednesday Frederick H. Osborn, the American delegate to the Atomic Energy Commission, asserted that western negotiation with the Soviet Union is futile. "They hear only the echo of their own voices," he declared. "They are victims of a system which fixes their minds in an unchangeable cast."

Thus it appears that the patient and indeed generous endeavor of the United States to arrive at a rational solution of the problem posed by this country's development and exclusive possession of the most formidable weapon ever devised by man is now officially at an end. Americans are entitled to take pride in the fact that the endeavor was made—and made conscientiously. It was a most extraordinary endeavor. Perhaps never before has a nation, advantaged, if only temporarily, as this Nation was by so dramatic a military secret, sought to outlaw its use for military purposes, to share its beneficient potentialities and to submit it to cooperative control. The United States insisted as a condition precedent to this renunciation of its military advantage only upon adequate guarantees that no other nation would turn the secret to military use. To have insisted upon less than this would have been to betray not only America but the civilized world.

The essence of the American plan lay in a relinquishment of national sovereignty in such degree as to place absolute authority over all the materials and means for the production of atomic energy in the hands of a supra-national body—an atomic development authority or an international atomic agency. This meant a sort of international socialization; and it is an astonishing paradox of which we have taken note before that such a program should have been proposed by the world's leading capitalist country, yet rejected out of hand by the country which calls itself the motherland of communistic socialism. This partial transfer of sovereignty was acceptable to all the nations in the Atomic Energy Commission with the exception of the Soviet Union and its satellites; the latter insisted, as a prerequisite even to consideration of international control, upon an agreement outlawing the use of atomic bombs and upon unilateral disarmament by the United States so far as the bomb is concerned. This was what brought about the present impasse.

The alternative to effective international control of atomic energy is, of course, international rivalry in the development of atomic weapons. It is a grim alternative. Every competent scientific authority has warned that the secret of the atomic bomb cannot long remain a secret, that other nations, Russia among them, will possess atomic weapons within a few years at most. In such a rivalry, supremacy is the price of survival. It becomes of paramount importance, then, that American science be kept free to retain the supremacy it achieved as a direct consequence of its freedom; this country cannot afford to engage in any sterile militarization of science. In atomic rivalry, supremacy must be reckoned the surest protection against aggression. Eventually, the world must continue to hope, rivalry will give way to a rational agreement under which it can be ended.

Call For Injunction

Coincident with the release yesterday of the Board of Inquiry's report on the coal strike the President directed the Attorney General to petition any District Court having jurisdiction over the parties to enjoin the dispute. His action is amply justified by the facts and conclusions set forth in the board's statement, which points out that Mr. Lewis made no effort to negotiate with the operators before the work stoppage. This was in complete disregard of the terms of the coal wage agreement negotiated last year. Nor has he taken any steps to "advise, counsel, or order the miners back to work in order that the provisions as to collective bargaining may be employed."

The report also brushed aside Mr. Lewis' specious argument that the miners stopped work individually and of their own accord after he had informed them that the operators had dishonored their contract and that they continue "gleefully" to violate it. The strike that followed receipt of this provocative communication was patently "more than a coincidence." It was, as charged, a case of cause and effect.

The board's conclusion that Mr. Lewis is responsible for the work stoppage and its stressing of the serious consequences of that stoppage to industry and the Nation as a whole are equivalent to an appeal for invocation of the injunctive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. Already the strike has been responsible for the loss of about 40 million tons of coal, and every day's delay entails the loss of additional millions. No doubt the Department of Justice has made good use of the time that has elapsed since the fact-finding report was completed to buttress arguments in support of a petition to enjoin the strikers. And it is to be hoped that the requested relief will be promptly granted.

Thereafter, if the miners obey the order to return to work, opportunity will be afforded for representatives of the miners and the operators to try to settle their differences. In that connection it should be pointed out that the recalcitrant attitude of Mr. Lewis which has necessitated, or rather deliberately provoked, resort to strong measures does not mean that the miners' demands are wholly unreasonable or that Mr. Lewis' interpretation of the provisions of the coal agreement in respect of the scope of the pension fund benefits is purely arbitrary. On the contrary, the board's report concedes that there is a provision of the agreement that, considered apart from the rest of the contract, might be construed as supporting his demand for payment of pensions to miners who are not employed by the operators who signed the agreement. On the other hand, certain portions of the contract support the contention of the operators that only employes of the signatories are covered by the pension plan. Moreover, the pension fund is to be based "upon proper actuarial computations." And the Lewis proposals would more than exhaust the present fund, leaving nothing for medical and hospital care, death benefits and other objectives.

Given the will to settle these disputed issues by peaceful means, the miners and the operators could reach an agreement through compromise that would avert the danger of another walkout when the present contract expires. But Mr. Lewis, who prefers to issue ultimatums based on his own interpretation of the terms of contract, backed by use of the strike weapon, will presumably do all in his power to obstruct efforts in that direction.

Family Tension

One glib, popular explanation of juvenile delinquency has long blamed everything on parents without looking for what lay back of parental inadequacy. As a result of this there has been in the last year a rash of State legislation to punish parents by law—even to send them to jail—when their children were guilty of delinquent behavior. But now a new aspect of parental responsibility has been uncovered in a four-year study of criminals and their families made by Dr. David Abrahamsen of Columbia University's department of psychiatry. It has been found that family tension breeds criminals. In other words, it is not so much parents' neglect of children, or failure to teach them proper behavior, but rather home bickering and nagging that set boys and girls on the wrong track. Even home tension of a subtle nature is felt by children, says Dr. Abrahamsen. Their response to such home life is resentment, hostility, and rebellion against authority, which often lead, not only to criminality, but to physical and mental diseases. Most of the criminal offenders examined in the study had psychosomatic illness, as did a high proportion of the 200 members of their families investigated.

This study is of special significance in that it shifts the emphasis in assessing crime causes from economic and social to emotional background. Weak, domineering, quarreling or emotionally infantile parents who create home tensions that encourage anti-social behavior in their offspring may be found in any walk of life. And they will not be cured by being lectured or even put in jail. Here again we come back to the problem that is looming larger and larger in man's search for peace and order in the world, as well as in his home and personal life. It is that of developing more emotionally mature human beings, especially those who have anything to do with children.

Homo Americanus

Mr. Geoffrey Gorer, a British anthropologist who was here on some mission or other for his government during the war, took advantage of his opportunity to make a professional study of homo Americanus in his native habitat. The result has been embodied in a book called The American People, which has been the occasion of some excitement in quarters where such studies are taken seriously.

Mr. Gorer finds that most of the distinctive characteristics of the American male animal arise from the circumstance that he is bound in infancy to the apron strings of the American female and spends the rest of his life in a furious but never quite successful effort to break loose from them. Out of this struggle comes his excessive but never quite plausible emphasis on his virility, or he-manliness, evinced in boyhood by the dread of being mistaken for a sissy and in maturity by the hard-boiled character of his business ethics, or in more aggravated cases by chronic alcoholism.

These antics, however, in no wise deceive the ascendant gyneocracy, which continues to rule with a firm hand and to exploit to its own benefit the superstitious reverence of homo Americanus for everything female. Thus in the United States a man's social status and the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens is measured by the cost and quality of his wife's fur coat. This also explains, so Mr. Gorer thinks, the curious ambivalence of Americans in the matter of foreign relations. On his two-fisted, square-shooting, hard-hitting, he-man side the American insists on business arrangements highly favorable to himself, but on his mama's-boy, pantywaist side he is hurt beyond measure to discover that he is not always loved by the foreigner, or that his most cherished ideals are not accepted at face value abroad.

What is at the bottom of this curious ambivalence? Mr. Gorer thinks it proceeds from the universally low esteem in which pater familias is held in the American scheme of family life. In folk arts of America, such as the movies and the comic strip, the father is a universally comic figure to be made sport of on all occasions, but especially on the feast day which has been dedicated to him by a kind of amused afterthought. This contempt of the father, Mr. Gorer believes, proceeds from the American revolt against the whole idea of Authority, of which pater familias is the psychological symbol. The father, Mr. Gorer finds, is despised as the representative of conservatism; in a nation of immigrants it was father who clung most tenaciously to the old European ideas. The father, in short, is the perennial figure of King George III, and to make game of the old geezer is just another way of perpetuating the spirit of 1776. In Europe, where the Father Image is still potent, there is danger of dictatorship; but in America the danger is rather one of anarchy.

Well, that's how we appeared to Mr. Gorer after his eight years' observation of us. It explains to his satisfaction not only why we drink so much milk, encourage our women to wear sweaters and buy pin-up girl pictures at the drug store, but also why we distrust our politicians, dislike military service, and do our best to ignore the painful realities of history.

Horse Sense On ERP

Sometimes a three-minute colloquy in Congress can get closer to the heart of a great issue than a three-hour debate. A good example was heard on the House floor during the last day of debate on the foreign aid bill. Representative Oren Harris, who comes from the bustling oil town of El Dorado, Ark., was worried over the shortage of steel for developing oil resources. So he proposed putting a virtual embargo on the export of oil-drilling equipment unless the Secretary of Defense should certify that such exports were necessary and desirable.

At this point Representative Monroney of Oklahoma strode to the well of the House. He thought such a step would "seriously jeopardize the success of the entire Marshall Plan."

> I come from an oil-producing district [he said]. I know that we have oiled two world wars with Western Hemisphere oil, and we are running out. This effort in the Marshall Plan, this 800 million dollars earmarked for oil-production machinery, is to help Europe produce some of its own oil, and stop draining the Western Hemisphere oil. Now, let's be reasonable and honest . . . We can either export our own oil over a long sea lane and further reduce our own supply or we can let them have a little of this oil equipment and develop some of their own resources.

There, we think, Mr. Monroney put much of the case for ERP in a nutshell. His argument applied equally to those who would have shut off exports of fertilizer, steel, or farm machinery, because of shortages here; to all those who simply will not and cannot understand what a "recovery program" means. The very essence of ERP is that it is not unending charity, but an opportunity for Europe to get off our back and onto its own feet. This is the criterion by which it will be judged. The Oklahoma Congressman has rendered still another service by disposing of a vicious idea with plain horse sense and courage.

"Anti-Poll-Tax Bill"

Your opposition to the poll tax in your editorial of March 29 as a condition of voting is nullified by your suggested procedures of State action and constitutional amendment, both of which are lacking in feasibility.

The seven States in question are now violating Article 14 of the Constitution on apportionment. I quote: "But when the right to vote . . . is denied . . . or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in . . . proportion . . ." Thus, if a third of the adult citizens in any State is denied the right to vote because of failure to pay poll taxes, the number of Congressmen for that State should be reduced by one third.

This provision has not been enforced because the combine of Republicans with Southern Democrats makes it impossible to challenge successfully the qualifications of Congressmen who present themselves from these States.

Under Article 14 the number of Congressmen from Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia should now be reduced by at least one third, perhaps by one half. I believe you should editorialize in support of such reapportionment or in support of the bill by which Congress can remove, at this session, the illegal restraint on voting. Let's support the Constitution now and not relegate corrective measures to blind allies.

Defense of Mr. Parisius

When a member of my parish who is a paragon of integrity and honor is subjected to slander and false accusation I cannot remain silent. I refer to Mr. Herbert W. Parisius of the Department of Commerce.

It seems to me that a man who is elected as a Representative to the United States Congress should make certain about his information, or misinformation, before making public charges against anyone. Mr. Parisius is a fine Christian gentleman and an ordained Lutheran clergyman. He has never been unfrocked. In the Lutheran Church a pastor may resign, if he desires to, for any reason or for no reason.

Second, the slur that Mr. Parisius has communistic leanings is preposterous. He is as patriotic a citizen of the United States as any man. I would unqualifiedly trust him anywhere.

I believe a public apology to Mr. Parisius is the least his false accusers can do to make amends.

Symphony Security

For some weeks the Washington newspapers have been giving a great deal of space to the drive for funds to sustain the National Symphony Orchestra. The ability of Dr. Kindler as a conductor has been attacked and defended, the contributions have not been sufficient, and numerous opinions re the orchestra have been advanced, but I dare suggest two important phases which I believe have been overlooked.

First, the symphony is "national" in name only. Neither the Federal nor District government contributes one penny toward its maintenance, all expenses being met by seat sales and voluntary contributions. Secondly, and I believe most important to the success of the organization, is the question of the musicians who make the symphony possible. No matter how able a leader in any line or profession, it is the little fellow who makes for ultimate success, in this particular instance the fine body of artists who constitute the Symphony Orchestra.

Does their contract call for a salary commensurate with their ability and standard of living, considering they are not employed the entire year? In case of illness or other emergency are they protected as are workers in factories, stores, private industry or the Government? Does the union to which they must of necessity belong protect them to any extent?

While I know nothing about music professionally and am only an occasional patron of the symphony, I have pondered these questions while enjoying a concert. Whether or not Dr. Kindler is an able director, whether or not he is a good business manager are debatable questions, but the question of whether or not the symphony remains depends upon the sense of security held by the artists. Certainly they should be entitled to some form of social security or insurance, or is the fact the symphony is a nonprofit enterprise a further reason for nonprotection of the artists?

Policing Russia

Chronological study of the thought trends of public men about foreign affairs reveals the sickening, step by step retreading of the identical paths laboriously plotted out 10 years ago with regard to the aggressions of Hitler. A year ago public opinion was substantially in favor of the steps which we now belatedly take.

There is much talk of "preventing" war by being strong, united, demonstrating democracy, telling Russia she must "go no further," and a variety of other measures of like nature. Such measures can delay war, and thereby aid the aggressor, but they cannot prevent it. To prevent war is to make it impossible to wage war—to talk of anything less is to miss the point that what we wish is to stay alive.

There is one way to prevent war and insure survival. That is world-wide police action to remove the clique of dictators in Russia now, while power is at the command of peace-loving nations in such overwhelming force that it can, intelligently used, eliminate the possibility of world war without the necessity of any widespread war in the process.

Return Of German Art

Will you permit a German, resident in this country, to comment on the current controversy concerning the priceless German art collection now on view at the National Gallery?

It is gratifying, indeed, that the United States Government has made it clear that it regards these pictures as the property of the German people, which should be returned to them as soon as possible. But is it wise to send these pictures back at this very moment? The same papers which announced the Government's decision to repatriate the German art collection reported on the "very, very serious" situation abroad which might, against all the wishes and hopes of men of good will, lead to armed conflict in not too distant a future. The western zones of Germany, to which the pictures are to be shipped would, in such event, be one of the major theaters of war. This would expose the pictures to the risk of total destruction or at least of falling into less appreciative hands.

I would like to suggest an alternative course: First, keep the art collection in this country until the present storm blows over, one way or the other, while once again unambiguously reaffirming their German ownership.

Second, as a token of German ownership, let the Government invite two or three German art experts to come over here and act as curators of the collection, arranging exhibits, giving lectures, etc. This would also serve as a small beginning of that cultural interchange between the United States and occupied Germany, which is so badly needed on a large scale.

Third, send the art collection, properly protected, on a travelling exhibition throughout this country, or at least to its major cities, thus giving the maximum number of Americans a chance to have a look at some of the cultural treasures of Europe which they might never otherwise see. It might give many of them a greater appreciation of the values of our western civilization.

Fourth, arrange to charge an entrance fee wherever the pictures are shown, the proceeds to be turned over to the Quakers for relief in Germany, either earmarked for the rehabilitation of libraries and museums, or for the support of hungry university or art students, whose present need is so desperate. It would be quite possible to have a "fashionable" opening night in each city, with an entrance fee of between $1 and $3, and thereafter to throw the gates open to everybody at a nominal fee of, say, 10 cents.

It seems to me that a great deal of good could come from a program such as this, not the least of which would be the fact that so priceless a treasure would not be needlessly exposed to the danger of destruction.

I was shocked and disappointed to see a front-page article in The Washington Post of March 29, contributing in such an unwarranted fashion to the current confused thinking on Russia. Upon careful reading of the article, "Viewers of German Art Fear Loss of Pictures to Russians," I discovered that it did nothing but pass on the unreflective comments of people who seem to have been short on art but well up on the current prejudices.

The article might simply be dismissed as another public opinion feature in which those interviewed have not considered the question sufficiently to have an opinion worth reporting. But the headlines dragging the Russians into the matter lay The Washington Post open to suspicion of stooping low for sensationalism. Can't we find enough actual deeds for which to blame the Russians without parading the prejudiced opinions of the uninformed as to what they might do (unless, of course, we do it first, as these ethical people advise)?

This kind of tendentious twist to what should have been an art and not a political story is doing a distinct disservice to the cause of clear thinking in this tense time, and is certainly unworthy of Washington Post standards.

After reading the comments of visitors to the National Art Gallery in regard to the German art now on exhibition, I deem it advisable that the paintings be held in this country for at least another five years.

It is certain that their return will mean their destruction. Let us keep them until they can be enjoyed in Europe in the same way the United States has enjoyed them in the past few weeks.

America And Free Europe

By Andre Visson

Belgian Visitors

THE VISITORS from Belgium—Prince-Regent Charles and Belgium's able Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Paul-Henri Spaak—who are due to arrive in Washington this Sunday, will find here more than a series of official luncheons and dinners. They will find American official backing of the political, economic and military pact which the three Benelux countries, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg, signed with Britain and France in Brussels on March 17.

The day the pact of the five western European nations was signed in Brussels, President Truman, in his message to the joint session of Congress, expressed his approval of the Brussels pact and indicated America's intention to support the western European nations in their efforts to defend themselves. The presidential message was received with gratitude in western European capitals, but it failed to electrify the people of western Europe.

They have never doubted that if World War III broke out the United States would be in it from the beginning, and that an American victory would assure their independence. Their main worry at the present time is whether the United States can still prevent World War III. What they want from Washington are statements and actions that would impress the man in the Kremlin to the point of making the Politboro revise its present policy of indirect aggression.

Their next worry is whether the United States is in a position to prevent their countries from being overrun and occupied by the Red armies. They do not doubt that the United States will fight. But they would like to know where it will fight. They would like to know what European countries will be America's next battlefields.

It is certainly not easy for American policymakers and strategists to answer these questions. But it has been felt in Washington that the presidential approval of the Brussels pact must be expanded and presented in more specific terms. Three State Department experts have been working together with the military experts on a formula which is expected to be presented to the Belgian visitors when they arrive here.

AMERICAN policymakers have recognized the necessity of bringing together all anti-Communist forces in Europe, but they have been only too well aware of the extreme difficulties involved.

An American military guaranty, if given only to the five signatories of the Brussels pact, might create in western Europe, and particularly in Moscow, the wrong, and most dangerous, impression that it is only for those five western European countries that the United States would go to war. This is certainly not the case. Any threat to the independence of the Scandinavian countries is a matter of great concern to American policymakers and strategists.

A blanket military guaranty to all 16 beneficiaries of the Marshall Plan does not appeal to American policymakers either. The principle of the Marshall Plan is that the United States will give its economic aid to all European countries willing to help themselves through mutual economic cooperation. American policymakers would like to follow the same principle in the field of American military assistance and protection—that such aid be given only to those European nations which are willing to organize their military defense through regional cooperation.

But the 16 nations of the Marshall Plan have not yet agreed on such military cooperation and would apparently have great difficulty in reaching such an agreement. It is reported in Washington that neither Switzerland nor Sweden view with any enthusiasm the idea of joining a military alliance of western European countries.

The Swedes are willing to establish military cooperation with their Scandinavian neighbors, but are not attracted by the idea of being brought into a military alliance with Britain and France. It is not excluded, however, that should the Brussels pact countries receive a clear-cut American guaranty, the Swedes may revise their attitude toward a western European military and political union. And the same revision of attitude may take place in Switzerland, especially if Moscow should continue and even intensify its aggressive policy.

Finally, in the opinion of both American and European diplomats, Spain constitutes the thorniest problem in the organization of a complete and efficient western European union. Everyone agrees that in another world war Spain will be called on to play an extremely important part in western strategy. And there are many people, both in Washington and in western Europe, who wonder why, if in our fight against Hitler we accepted cooperation with Stalin, we cannot in our present fight against Stalin, accept cooperation with Franco?

The answer to this is, that for the British Laborites, and even more for the Socialists in France and Belgium, to accept Franco's Spain as a full-fledged member of the western European union would amount to political suicide. They would be disapproved of by their supporters and condemned by the trade-unions from which they get their main political strength.

Under these circumstances American policymakers have found themselves compelled to be guided by two principles: Let us avoid anything that might create the impression that we are imposing political conditions on the western European nations seeking our protection. Let us give our protection and assistance only to those nations which get together to defend themselves. These two principles lie behind the American formula which will be presented to Prince Regent Charles and Premier Spaak in Washington.

Matter of Fact

B-29s Look Capable of Knockout

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

THE odds are still on peace. Yet for the first time the possibility of war—not next year, nor in five years, nor in 10 years, but war in the next weeks or months—is admitted by sober leaders of the Government.

It is time to take stock of our strength. It is time especially to ask whether if the worst happens, we really can deliver the knockout blow which will be the only means of avoiding a long drawn-out, world-destroying war of attrition.

The answer depends on two questions. First does our monopoly of the atomic bomb really permit us to knock out a great land power like the Soviet Union? Second, have we the capability of delivering atomic bombs to the Soviet Union's vital centers?

No question is more bitterly debated by the services than the first. The best that can be said is that the political and economic experts who have devoted themselves to studying the Soviet system, believe that its warmaking power will rapidly disintegrate if its vital centers are destroyed. If this is correct, everything depends on our own capability to deliver the bomb to these vital centers. And this means, of course, that everything depends on the capability of our strategic aircraft to strike over great distances into the Soviet heartland.

Four Possible Bases

RECENT rigorous tests show that standard B-29s can strike at targets more than 2000 miles distant and return from their mission. With this range, bases in the Western Hemisphere cannot be used. But it is inconceivable that the Red Army could simultaneously and instantaneously overrun Western Europe, the Mediterranean, the Middle East and northern India. From any of these regions, aircraft with an operating radius of 2000 miles can reach the Soviet heartland.

Furthermore, it is an operational fact that B-29s can now be equipped for refueling in the air. They are thus enabled to strike at and return from vastly more distant targets. Midair refueling has been fully tested by the British and has even been used in passenger operations.

With only one refueling on the way out, B-29s can strike and return from targets 3000 miles distant. Refueling on the way out and on the way home, they can reach targets 4000 miles distant.

Modification of the B-29s to permit air refueling is just as important in Boeing's huge new modification contract as adaptation of the aircraft to carry atomic bombs.

Odds on the Bombers

THUS the capability to penetrate the Soviet heartland already exists. But can the B-29s, driving home the attack across the huge spaces of Russia, survive interception by the high-altitude, high-speed German jet fighters which the Soviets have been hastily producing since the end of the war?

Here again, rigorous tests have been conducted with B-29 aircraft flying over an area with as dense and strong a radar warning system as now exists in the world. Of the B-29s engaged in the test, 60 per cent were located by the warning net. After location, fighters found 40 per cent.

Under war conditions, of course, only this 40 per cent would be subject to fighter attack. Equally of course, the B-29s' defensive armament would account for some of the fighters. The inference is that only a limited number of these B-29s would have failed to accomplish their mission, even against the heaviest odds.

But the Soviet Union, far from having a dense and strong radar warning system, has a warning system almost as feeble as our own. We in the United States have nothing that can properly be termed full warning, because it would cost several billion dollars and require the imposition of every kind of industrial priority to throw a true warning net over North America.

The Soviets have, at best, limited warning nets narrowly surrounding their most important centers. This weakness would at least double the odds on the B-29s, and halve their percentage of loss. In short, the strategic air arm can do the job, according to the best calculations, or rather the best guesses, that can be made at this time.

Tenth of Estimate

IN THE circumstances, it is difficult to understand the decision to slight the air arm in the program for expanding the defense services.

Defense Secretary Forrestal has fantastically explained that putting through the repeatedly recommended 70 air group program would cost 15 billion dollars additional. But this is a recommended peacetime air strength, and the Secretary's figure represents the total cost of mobilizing all the services on a war footing.

The actual cost of the 70 group program would be about 1½ billion extra the first year and 2.7 billions the second. It does not seem much to gamble on the only weapon which might prevent another war from becoming the beginning of a dark age.

Era Ends Amid Charter's Ashes

TO IDENTIFY two milestones of a tragic era, compare two documents. One was given out last month, the other in August, 1941.

The recent one was President Truman's address to Congress, in which he dealt with our relation to Russia and called on us for military preparedness. The reason for preparedness was expressed in two sentences: ". . . The Soviet Union and its agents have destroyed the independence and democratic character of a whole series of nations in eastern and central Europe . . . The United States is deeply concerned with the survival of freedom in these nations . . ."

Thus, in March, 1948, we were called on to assure survival of freedom in nations, their independence and democratic character. This call is the present milestone in the tragic era. For the earlier milestone, turn back seven years.

In August, 1941, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill conferred on a warship in the Atlantic. There they composed a declaration of principles and purposes. As officially issued in Washington, it included these principles:

". . . the rights of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live."

". . . to all nations the means of dwelling safely within their own boundaries . . . assurance that all the men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear . . ."

". . . no territorial changes that do not accord freely with expressed wish of the peoples concerned."

Comparison of these principles and purposes with those in President Truman's address; the substantial identity of the two, and the fact that in 1948 we are called on to carry out purposes that were proclaimed in 1941—this, and what took place in the seven years between, is the underlying theme of the history of the tragic era.

'See Back Copies'

THE Roosevelt-Churchill statement took hold on the imagination and hopes of the country and the world. It was called the Atlantic Charter, and this term became for a time as familiar as the Declaration of Independence.

It was given a standing among historic documents comparable to that of the Constitution of the United States. The full text of it was included in a standard book of reference, the World Almanac. (When in preparing this article I turned to the World Almanac of 1948 for the text of the Atlantic Charter, I did not find that subject in the index and was obliged to turn back to an earlier issue.)

Throughout the war the people felt that the Atlantic Charter embodied the purpose for which we fought; the loftiness of its principles and the eloquence of its language gave them cheer and increased the spirit of endurance.

The Atlantic Charter was made official and binding by inclusion in at least three international agreements. It was affirmed by the 26 United Nations in a formal declaration in Washington in January, 1942. It was subscribed to by the United States, Britain, Russia and China in a joint declaration in Moscow in 1943. It was agreed to in the treaty of mutual assistance signed by Russia and Britain in London after Russia become involved in the war.

Its Swift Decay

IN LATE 1944 it became apparent that the Atlantic Charter was being violated. One principle of it—"no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned"—was violated by Russia's seizure of Polish territory, with formal consent by Britain and apparent assent by President Roosevelt. Another principle—"the rights of all peoples to the form of government under which they will live"—was violated when Stalin, toward the end of the war, set up a Communist government in readiness to take over Poland.

When these violations of the Atlantic Charter, interpreted as virtual abandonment of it, became known in the United States, there ensued dismay and letdown. It was expressed by Senator Vandenberg in an eloquent speech in Congress, which had a large part in giving him his present elevation. One phrase, I quote from memory, was, "America was shaken to the very hearthstones."

That disillusionment, followed by others after the war ended, and including realization that the Russian government could not be relied upon to live up to agreements, is what created the occasion for President Truman's address last month. The somber details compose the history of the tragic era.

Prague's Red Wreckers Go On to Italy

By Seymour Freidin

PRAGUE, April 3.—Communist wrecking crews recruited from central and eastern European police forces are now based in Austria and Italy to lend a hand to agitation in those countries.

These agents provocateurs, nearly all of whom were trained by the Soviet MVD (secret police), assisted in the Communist coup in Czechoslovakia.

The agents, who are well versed in the use of oratory, the fist and crowd discipline, were in evidence in Prague from February 20 to 28. Then most of them departed for the Russian zone of Austria and filtered into Vienna.

The group originally in Prague numbered about 80. They included Yugoslavs, Poles, Czechs, Russians and Italians.

Among them also were two Hungarians whose appearance in eastern European capitals in the past has meant trouble was imminent.

Nearly all of the wreckers have taken advanced courses in propaganda and crowd techniques in the Soviet Union. Most of them are multilingual. All of them have had military experience and hold army rank in their native countries.

Their technique has been to lead claques in crowds demonstrating for Communist control, to cooperate with local Communists in placing "people's militia" at strategic points around a capital, and to lead raids on opposition party headquarters.

Two of the better known Yugoslavs used the names, "Captain Fillipo" and "Major Krakevic," in Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary before visiting Prague.

They all stayed in Vienna for several days at the beginning of March. Some of the Czechs went on a speaking tour of the Soviet zone. The Austrian Ministry of Interior charged that Russian district commanders called meetings of factory workers to hear the speeches.

Aided by some of the Yugoslav and Hungarian provocateurs, the Communists in Austria began a series of demonstrations which they said would culminate in a strike against food conditions. The strike never came off.

Most of the agents have since moved on to northern Italy via the Russian zone and Yugoslavia. They are engaged in preparations for the Italian elections.

T-Bone's Overrated

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., April 3. Some food surprises discovered here raise hopes for feeding many of the world's hungry people better and more cheaply.

The surprises came in studies at the nutritional biochemistry laboratory of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A few years ago the laboratory, directed by Dr. Robert S. Harris, showed that it is theoretically possible to feed a person for 4 cents a day. The food would be a special cereal mixture resembling cornflakes. It would give a person all the vitamins, minerals and other nutrients he needed.

But don't write for some of this food. The laboratory isn't making it, and doesn't plan to. The idea is not practical, Dr. Harris explained. No one would want to eat such dull food three times a day, and it wouldn't satisfy all his hunger.

"It would satisfy one kind of hunger—hidden hunger, or the lack of certain vitamins or nutrients which can lead to sickness. But it wouldn't overcome the other two kinds of hunger—hollow hunger, the feeling of never getting enough to fill your stomach, and humdrum hunger, the hunger from unattractive, unpalatable or unvaried diet. Humdrum hunger is a psychological undernourishment."

Tested in War

BUT from these experiments, the laboratory went on to prepare soup mixtures which are more practical. One was developed as part of a school lunch program. It is brown, is easily dissolved in water, and "tastes moderately good, like a thick soup, split pea, perhaps."

This soup supplies from one third to one half of the minerals and vitamins that a child needs but costs only 2 cents a day. During the war this type of soup helped feed millions of Europeans.

The laboratory now is experimenting with similar food mixtures to aid infants in India and Central America. Dr. Harris said these are intended particularly for children who don't even get mother's milk.

But such foods only supplement people's diets. Much more significant are new M. I. T. discoveries that many Central American plants are far better in food values than United States plants commonly used as food. This means, Dr. Harris said, that "people can be better fed on their native foods, and we should not impose our food habits upon others."

The laboratory analyzed several hundred Central American food plants and found that they were generally richer in nitrogen, calcium, iron, vitamins A and C and the B vitamins, niacin, thiamine and riboflavin. Many of these foods are unknown in the United States.

Similar work could be done in China, India and the Philippines, and to a lesser extent in European countries.

Nutritious Cocktail

A GOOD diet doesn't necessarily mean meals built around steaks, milk and honey. It means food that supplies all the vitamins, proteins, minerals and other nutrients needed to maintain health.

One M. I. T. study showed that some Mexican children, from large families with an income of only 35 cents a day, were no more malnourished than middle-class children in Michigan. The Mexican diet was vastly different, but it was as well—or as poorly—balanced as that of the Americans.

The Otomi Indians in Mexico have a better diet than many American workers, Dr. Harris continued. Their daily menu of beans, pulque, chili peppers, wild greens of many kinds and tortillas from corn gives them most of the nutrients they need.

Pulque, a juice from the century plant, is a potent nutrition cocktail. Its alcohol content is low, from 3 to 5 per cent. But it gives the Indians their main supply of vitamin C and their second-best supply of calories, calcium, iron and three important B vitamins.

In the United States, Dr. Harris said, the general concept of a good diet is one in which 25 per cent of the food is animal products—meat, milk and butter. But there isn't enough land in the world, particularly in the hungriest countries, to raise this number of animals. Secondly, he added, most of the people couldn't afford to buy such foods if they were available.

Most, Not Best

MANY Americans cannot afford such a diet. This, and ignorance about what they should eat, is why many middle-class Americans are not better fed than poor persons in some other countries.

"Diet balance is of critical importance. We in the United States may not be the best-fed nation in the world. We may be the most fed. It is likely that the primitive peoples of the earth are better fed than we," says Dr. Harris.

We might take some tips from the American Indians and the pioneers, who maintained pretty good health. They often ate such things as nuts and seeds from trees, wild berries, the shoots from shrubs and small animals like squirrels and rabbits. Pigweed, a plant that resembles spinach, is high in vitamins A and C. In some regions, tasty foods might be prepared from such plant sources.

AN X-ray gauge developed by General Electric engineers automatically and continuously measures the thickness of a moving strip of red hot steel, without touching it. Heretofore, such measurements had to wait until the steel had cooled, and a high-speed mill might turn out six tons of steel of the wrong thickness before the test could be made. Two beams of X-ray are used. One shoots through the moving steel strip, the other goes through a standard reference sample known to have the desired thickness. Their intensities then are compared with a radiation detector.

The air 100 miles above the earth is more than hot enough to boil water under conditions existing on the surface of the earth, Dr. Everett F. Cox, Naval Ordnance Laboratory, Washington, informed the American Physical Society and Institute of Aeronautical Sciences. At a height of 20 miles there is a spring-like temperature of 70 degrees, and between, at 45 miles, there is a cold layer of 150 degrees below zero.

Relief from the unpleasant odors of the inks used in the printing of some popular magazines is promised by a development from the Dow Chemical Co. laboratories in Midland, Mich., in which perfumed materials are mixed with inks. An issue of the company's publication, Dow Diamond, printed with perfumed ink, carries a pervasive odor.

Perfumes are also persuasive commercially, the publication reports. Two lots of stockings were offered for sale in a department store; they were identical except that one lot was perfumed. The perfumed stockings were purchased in almost every case "because they had better texture and color." "There's nothing rational about perfume—it belongs purely to the realm of the subconscious," the publication remarks.

Sterility may result not from a lack of female hormones but from an unbalanced relationship between the supply of two essential ones, Dr. Joseph H. Women in the fertilized state, he reported, produce in great excess, and discard, the hormone which is required by the women who are sterile because of the unbalanced relationship.

Small-scale tests have shown the method to be more efficient than biological methods now used, he said.

Army Overlooks Empty Holsters

By Drew Pearson

OUR fighting men in the last war would be the first to agree that American production—their weapons and equipment—proved the decisive factor in ultimate defeat of the enemy.

However, while Defense Secretary Forrestal et al have been clamoring like old-fashioned revivalists for enactment of selective service and universal military training, there has been no real planning for industrial preparedness—to equip the men Forrestal insists must be drafted and trained.

It's the old story of cart-before-the-horse military thinking. A trained pilot without a plane is no better off than a ground soldier minus a rifle.

Industry scouts have run into a stone wall of secrecy at the Pentagon, trying to learn how far the Defense Department—more particularly, the Army-Navy Munitions Board—wants to go in gearing up the production of munitions and equipment for future emergencies. Fact is that military leaders themselves don't know. In their zeal to sell selective service and UMT to Congress, they have given little or no thought to the subject.

The same apathy applies to the stockpiling of essential materials, notably industrial alcohol. Our present reserve of industrial alcohol would last about 10 days in an emergency.

De Valera Points Left

IRELAND'S FORMER Prime Minister De Valera told Senators and Congressmen at a private luncheon the other day that Ireland was following the British trend toward socialism.

"In America we seem to be swinging toward the right," blurted one guest.

"That's a serious mistake," De Valera shook his head. "That's a serious mistake."

Under the Dome

THE WALLACEITES continue to make Democratic inroads. In Hartford, Conn., the Democrats raised $20,000 at a Jackson Day dinner with 600 guests. Same night the Wallaceites raised $5000 with only 150 guests . . . "The Search"—a great new M-G-M movie—tells the story of the lost children of Central Europe. Don't miss it. . . . When Congressman Bender of Ohio complimented Mississippi's new Senator Stennis on being "such an improvement over your predecessor," Stennis asked that the remark be stricken from the record. . . . Maury Maverick says, "Only men of FDR's ability or McKellar's lingual qualities should call a newspaperman a liar. Otherwise they fizzle." . . . Credit Clair Wilcox, the State Department's foreign trade troubleshooter with doing a superhuman job at the Havana Trade Conference. . . . The law firm of Missouri's GOP Senator Kem represents the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. 'Twill be interesting to watch how he votes on tidelands oil.

Spotlight Burns Lewis

THE COAL DISPUTE started out as usual with a certain amount of blame on each side. But John L. Lewis, by his usual recalcitrance, has managed to make the public think that he's the only one to blame. John's craving for the spotlight has proved his undoing.

For months the dispute over pensions for overage coal miners dragged on, until it finally got to the letter-writing stage. By that time it was hopeless. Lewis loves to write highhanded letters, and the operators didn't help things by delaying even a counter proposal to his pension proposal.

Finally, just before the walkout, a Government official stepped in "unofficially" with a compromise. Lewis had asked $100 a month pension for all miners over 60 who have worked 20 years in a mine and are members of the United Mine Workers. They don't have to be active miners today.

The compromise proposal was $75 a month to every miner over 63 until June 30, when the mine contract expires. This got nowhere.

The basic questions in dispute narrow down to this:

1. There isn't enough money in the welfare fund to pay $100 a month to miners over 60. The Social Security Board has made a study of the fund and agrees that it is inadequate.

2. Lewis insists that about 15,000 retired miners receive pensions. This would include such cardholders as William Green, now president of the AFL, and Phil Murray, now president of the CIO.

Wall Street's Reward

GOVERNMENT coal experts are leaning back and saying privately to the operators, "We told you so."

They can't help recalling how, just after the Government turned the mines back to private operation last June, J. P. Morgan's U. S. Steel Corp. and the Mellon-controlled Pittsburgh Consolidated Coal Co. handed Lewis a 45-cents-an-hour wage boost, plus welfare fund, plus almost everything else he asked for.

A few months before, the Government had refused to yield to Lewis when he struck and had gone to court for an injunction. When U. S. Steel and the Mellons reversed this tough policy, Government coal men predicted that the Wall Street boys would regret being so easy. Now they do.

Diplomatic Pouch

SENATOR VANDENBERG has rejected a plea by Jewish leaders that he attack the Administration's doubletalk on Palestine. . . . The State Department will receive a special fund from Congress to launch the mysterious "Program X" to give financial help to the anti-Communist underground in Russian satellite states. The idea was fostered by GOP Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire. . . . Secretary Marshall has ordered a speed-up of the Japanese peace conference. With a new world war threatening, Marshall wants to clean up all easily solved problems to clear the decks for joint world action against Russia. . . . Also, Washington thinks General MacArthur has reigned supreme in Tokyo long enough . . . Here's how powerful the appease-Germany clique has become inside the Army: American war crime prosecutors at Nuernburg can't even subpena witnesses any more. The brass hats require special permission before any witness can be brought to Germany. . . . Italian diplomats expect Russia to make one more major psychological warfare move before the April 18 elections—namely, to renounce all claims to the 100 million dollars due Moscow as Italian reparations.

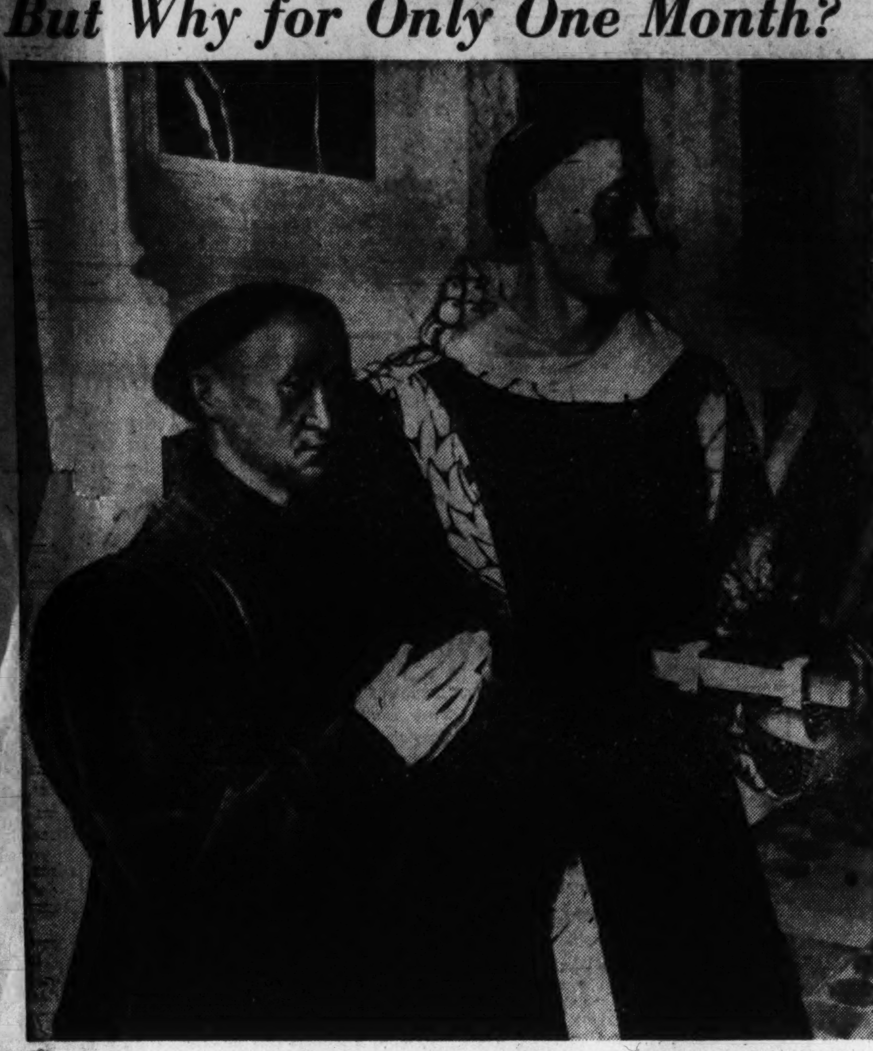
Berlin Paintings Are On Display—

But Why for Only One Month?



Picture Courtesy District of Columbia Public Library

Jean Fouquet's "Etienne Chevalier and Saint Stephen" among the Berlin Museum paintings on display at the National Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

"WHY, after having been in this country since 1945, are the Berlin Museum paintings being shown at the National Gallery for only one month?"

That was the question posed by Cuban Art Critic Jose Gomez Sicre at this week's "Celebrity Interview" tea at the Shoreham sponsored by the Artists Guild of Washington. It was directed to John Walker, Curator of Paintings at the National Gallery, and Lieut. Col. Irvine Russell, who was there not to speak officially for the military authorities but because he was the discoverer of the paintings buried 2100 feet underground in the German salt mine. That the query struck an immediate response with the audience was evident.

Walker replied that when it was decided to exhibit the paintings, officials did not realize popular response would be so great. Since the Gallery was merely showing the works at the request of the Department of the Army, he remarked that any decision to extend the exhibition period rested with the military. He added that he hoped some arrangement might be made to do so.

As Gomez Sicre rightly pointed out, with "everyone" trying to see the paintings within the allotted time, no one is able to see them properly. If you arrive at the opening hour on a week-day, the crush is not quite so great. But on a Tuesday morning, for example, we spied two out of town museum officials, an art professor from one of the Eastern universities, several artists and art students, joined with hordes of children, parents, teachers and spring tourists in a common effort to get satisfactory glimpses of the paintings. This was shortly after 10, presumably a slack time because no one with a job can attend in mid-morning. By noon, as we left, the crowd was thickening.

Ground Floor Crowded

THE big push is on the ground floor, and understandably, for the main interest of the show centers in the German and Flemish paintings, which are featured here with the early Italian. Several cases in the entrance hall are devoted to the smallest works. They had to be moved from the center of a gallery in direct line between two exhibition rooms because they were obstructing traffic. Not easy to see where they are, they are nonetheless very much worth a look.

Included in the cases are Cranach the Elder's "Lucretia" and "Rest on the Flight into Egypt," several paintings by Van Eyck, both of the works by Petrus Christus, "The Holy Family with Angels," by Adam Elsheimer, a sixteenth-century German artist whose work is extremely rare, and "The Mourning Magdalen," by Quentin Metsys. Seen here, too, are "The Chess Players," by the Dutch artist, Lucas van Leyden, and a group of small panels credited to the great fifteenth-century Italian artist, Masaccio.

Symbol of the Show

APT also to be lost in the shuffle are such paintings as the fifteenth-century French panel portrait of "Etienne Chevalier and Saint Stephen," by Jean Fouquet. It is of interest because work by this painter, outstanding for his time and place, is relatively little known here. It might also serve as symbol for the entire show, reflecting so directly the dependence of artists through the ages—on church, state, or, as in this case, wealthy patron. Actually, the whole magnificent assemblage is made up almost entirely of commissioned works. The concept of painting primarily for one's own satisfaction is modern.

Etienne Chevalier, who lived during the reigns of Charles VII and Louis XI, was treasurer of France for many years. When his wife died, he commissioned Fouquet to paint a two-part panel to adorn her tomb in the Church of Melun. Half of the panel is seen here, the other half, "Madonna and Child with Angels," being in the Antwerp Museum.

Chevalier next commissioned the artist to do a series of religious miniatures in color, which took Fouquet eight years. Known as Chevalier's "Book of Hours," they were preserved by his family until about 1630, when they dropped out of sight for over 100 years. Finally a collector came across 40 of the miniatures in a shop in Basle, Switzerland. They are now in the Conde Museum at Chantilly, part of the memorable collection given to France by the Duc d'Aumale.

The Berlin French group also includes a few early anonymous paintings. Upstairs are classical seventeenth-century landscapes by Poussin and Claude Lorrain, and later works by Chardin and Watteau. But when we get to these, and to the two lonely nineteenth-century French representations by Manet and Daumier, it is more like seeing a supplement to the Gallery's own collections in these categories. In closing, a word to the hardy from Curator John Walker: He suggests that the Berlin paintings be viewed in conjunction with the Gallery's own. This would be profitable for study and comparison and to round out the picture. Also, a more practical consideration and one not offered by the curator, it might help to dilute the flow of traffic.

Japanese-Born Painter Has First One-Man Whitney Show

TO the Japanese-born painter Yasuo Kuniyoshi goes the distinction of being the first living artist to be honored with a one-man show by the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York. To celebrate the opening last week 300 artists, friends, and associates gathered to attend a banquet in his honor.

In 1906 Kuniyoshi arrived first in this country at the age of 13, armed mainly with optimism and the firm conviction that in this land of opportunity he would get his share. In the years between, he has had struggles sufficient to dash his hopes, but almost 50 years later has come recognition beyond the attainment of most men. The Whitney's retrospective, one of the largest given anywhere to a living artist, is a source of pride, but the artist's greater pride may be in his presidency of the newly formed Artists Equity Association, most effective instrument to date to champion the rights of painters, sculptors, and print-makers.

The Kuniyoshi exhibit, which will run to May 9, contains 71 oils, 14 paints in casein and gouache, 33 drawings and a group of lithographs. Works have been lent by private collectors and art museums from various parts of the country. From its earliest beginnings as the Whitney Studio Club, Kuniyoshi was always represented in Whitney exhibitions and in the permanent collection.

THE Society of Washington Artists is opening this afternoon its fifty-second annual exhibition in the National Collection of Fine Arts, Smithsonian Institution, 10th st. and Constitution ave. nw. The show, which will be on view [illegible] 28, was judged for awards by Artists Josef Albers, Fletcher Martin, and Francis Speight, all from out-of-town. The executive committee made the selection of the exhibit itself. President this year of the society, oldest in the District, is Sheffield Kagy, painter and print-maker.

Opening April 18 is the Phillips Memorial Gallery's annual exhibit of work by artists of Washington, Baltimore, and vicinity. The group, chosen by the directors of the gallery, consists entirely of oils.

The American Federation of Arts, which has headquarters here at 1262 New Hampshire ave. nw., has announced two additional traveling shows available for circulation. "Ghosts Along the Mississippi" is a collection of photographs by Clarence Laughlin of Louisiana Plantation Houses. It was shown here this season at the Phillips Gallery. "Guatemala" consists of 50 photographs by Hans Namuth, showing the country's volcanic mountain and crater lakes, examples of colonial architecture, and religious sculpture, popular festivals and Indians types. This exhibition was first shown at the American Museum of Natural History.

In conjunction with the tour of Georgetown Houses, an exhibition of painting and sculpture by artists of that section was organized and will be shown in St. John's Parish House, O and Potomac sts. nw., daily from 2 to 5 until April 11.

The Magazine Rack

IF WE DON'T want to fight Russia, the United States must stop shrinking from military alliances, eye the East-West division of the world realistically, and accept a return to the balance of power, says Hanson W. Baldwin in the current Saturday Evening Post. A frank system of alliances for collective security, preferably worked out under Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, is the middle way which we must follow, avoiding isolationism and imperialism on either side, this author feels.

Mr. Pulitzer's prizes come in for a double tongue-lashing from veteran newsmen in two magazines this month. Kenneth Stewart in '48 examines the record and finds the awards are too often given to conservatism, mediocrity, and to those who "protect bigtime journalism's interests." Carroll Binder in the American Mercury makes a similar indictment, but is careful to point out exceptions such as Ernie Pyle's deserved prize for war front stories, and the award given Edward T. Folliard of The Washington Post for exposing the fascist Columbians, Inc.

Look publishes a chapter on Boss Pendergast's shady career from Missouri Waltz, soon-to-be published book by Maurice M. Milligan. The same magazine presents evidence of the growth of plastic surgery, from a stepsister of the medical profession into an accredited branch of surgery. It can mean salvation for the baby born with a hare-lip, for victims of war, fire, and accident, for those psychologically crippled by facial defects, Geri Trotta points out.

THE 6000-house community of Leavittown, near Hicksville, Long Island, is proof that 4½-room solidly constructed and insulated cottages, complete to landscaping and utilities, can be built to rent for $60 a month, says Tom Bernard in the American. Leavitt & Sons, responsible for this remarkable building feat, say the secret lies in assembly-line methods.

For housing shortage sufferers, Popular Science presents "10 Easy Ways to Get That Extra Room." Consulting architect Joseph Aronson, the magazine comes up with some advice on partitions, storage walls, and an adaptable "Z-screen."

There is more advice for the householder in Phil Gustafson's "How to Catch a Burglar" in the Saturday Evening Post. The author collected his tips on safeguards against robbery from the best of sources — the burglars themselves.

A general's "ghost" reveals a lot of trade secrets and defends the ghost-writing profession as an essential part of public life in the Infantry Journal. The unknown authors of the generals' speeches are a useful lot and far from frustrated, insists this pseudonymous "Major Spook."

FAT PEOPLE are fat because they eat too much, not because of their "glands," Russell Maloney, who used to be 60 pounds overweight himself, says in Collier's. And a fat person overeats for the same reason that an alcholic drinks too much—because he's unhappy. To keep thin, the author counsels, first find out why your present life is not a satisfactory one.

If the President's daughter leads a life of many privileges, that life has considerable hardicaps, too. Genevieve Herrick compliments Margaret Truman on filling her difficult role well, in the April Red Book.

Holiday turns out a "Virginia Portfolio" this month, including handsome color shots of Monticello, the Shirley Mansion, the Warrenton horse show, and three of the State's educational institutions. Text and pictures stress Virginia's "Old Dominion" inheritance.

"How Does It Look to a Child?" asks McCall's, and answers the question with a wonderful set of pictures by Lisa Larsen. A close-up of what the small child sees when mother shakes her finger or that "nice dog" barks, is compared in each case with a picture of the scene as it appears to a grown-up. The article, by Toni Taylor, was written in collaboration with Vassar child psychologist Mary F. Langmuir.

Political Spectrum's Red to Blackshirt

danger almost as great as the Communists whom he would like to destroy.

Officially, the Right in Italy consists of three groups backed by some landowners and industrialists, by leaders of the old army and by discontented politicians of the old school. Former Premier Vittorio Orlando, the last survivor of the Big Four of the Versailles Conference of 1919, is one of their potential leaders. Among the component groups in this Rightist assortment is the so-called Liberal Party; another is the remnant of a short-lived movement called "L 'Uomo Qualunque"—the Common Man—and a third is the monarchists, who will put a separate list of candidates in the field.

Professional Heads Fascis

FINALLY, at the other pole from the Communists but just as sinister, is a Fascist movement masquerading under the cloak of the 'Movimente Sociale Italiano"—the Italian Social Movement. These are people with no clear program except a sentimental attachment to the old Fascist movement. They operate as the Communists do, in spite of a new law punishing any propaganda of violence or any movement which aims at the suppression of freedom. Their leader, still operating from behind the scenes, is none other than Carlo Scorza, the last secretary of the Fascist Party.

Scorza, the Fascist, must not be confused with his near-namesake, Carlo Sforza, the present Foreign Minister who is probably the most courageous and most respected figure in the anti-Communist movement. Sforza, now an old man, a survivor of pre-Mussolini cabinets, an exile under Fascism and war, is working with De Gasperi, but is regarded as being above party.

If the Communists do badly in the April 18 election, Sforza may win the supreme honor of his career by being elected the first President of the Italian Republic. The present President, Enrico de Nicola, a respected but colorless figure, has been serving only as provisional President until the first regular election could be held.

As in every election, the outcome of the Italian polling will depend on many imponderables. One is the effect of the rival Communist and anti-Communist propaganda among the women voters; and in this connection the influence of the Vatican may be important.

While Italy is an overwhelmingly Catholic country, it is also strongly anti-clerical at present. Probably millions of the Italian men who cross themselves reverently in church resent any attempt by the priests to direct their political thought. The same may not be true of the women.

Poverty Is Susceptible

THERE is little doubt, from reports reaching here, that the Communists have lost ground in Italy in recent weeks. The Western powers' proposal for the return of Trieste has clearly had a strong and perhaps decisive effect. But there is always a danger that in a country of desperate poverty, and of brutal extremes of wealth and poverty, the Communist appeal may be seductive.

There is also the danger that the Communists may put their iron hand into a velvet glove after the election, just as they have during the campaign. If they get enough votes to demand key positions in a coalition cabinet, they may be too shrewd to claim the positions for themselves.

They may, instead, put on a mask of respectability by proposing key positions for tired non-Communist politicians, such as Francesco Nitti, Premier for three succesive terms in the troubled days of 1919 and 1920. They could do this and put some of their own tough and unprincipled agents into the second-rank posts, where they would really be in control.

The danger is real, yet it has been seen and recognized in advance. The De Gasperi government is confident. The Italian people are being told that all help from the United States, even remittances from their relatives, will be cut off if Communism takes control; and this argument, brutal as it sounds, is believed to be taking effect.

Whichever way the election goes, it will be a turning-point, and it may be as important on Main Street as our own election next November.

Far Places, As Viewed by Henry James

PORTRAITS OF PLACES. By Henry James. With an essay on James as a Traveller by George Alvin Finch. Lear. 350 pp. $3.50.

WHEN Henry James was 12, his father took the family on a three-year trip to Europe. Henry, sr., wanted his children to have a "sensuous education," and Europe, he felt, was the place for the senses to expand and develop.

For young Henry it was the beginning—if intangibles can be dated—of a long life as an introspective, cosmopolitan writer.

After 1866—he was then 23 and had been to Harvard Law School—Henry James spent most of his life in Europe and was thus well-qualified to write the travel sketches for American periodicals first published in 1883 as "Portraits of Places."

"Our observation in any foreign land is extremely superficial, and our remarks are happily not addressed to the inhabitants themselves," James says in his article, "Italy Revisited." A writer, that is to say, doesn't recreate Italy. He creates and conveys his own Italy.

Because James was a shrewd observer and a seasoned traveler, though, there is still considerable interest in his observations on the character of people and places. This is especially true of his English pieces.

During the period when these sketches were being written, James wrote seven or more of his earlier novels and novelettes with cosmopolitan themes or settings, including "Daisy Miller." "Portraits of Places," here not completely reprinted, provides some insight into the background of this fiction.

The Question: B-50s Now Or Jets in '51

ers. Lacking bases within reach of our only potential enemy's vital centers, they say, the answer is a bomber with a speed close to that of any jet fighter. In other words, a "hot," fairly long-range jet bomber. It should stand a fair chance of getting to its target dropping its load and getting away safely.

We have such warplanes coming up. There is the Boeing XB-47—a large jet bomber with radically different swept-back wings. Glenn Martin over in Baltimore has the XB-48, which also is promising. Northrop's XB-49, the jet-propelled "flying wing," has great possibilities.

North American's jet B-45 is in production, and a reasonably good airplane. But its range is short; it hopes to hit targets 800 miles from base — considerably less than the bigger and later jet bombers.

500 M.P.H. Jet Wanted

WHAT is wanted is a satisfactory jet bomber that will cruise at 500 miles or better and have a top speed of 600 m.p.h., with a reasonably long range. Conventional type bombers are in the 300 to 400-mile class.

This is what Defense Secretary James Forrestal is believed to have had in mind last week when he opposed further expansion of Air Force production orders—beyond the 50 per cent boost he was urging. Next year, he indicated, he probably would be back, asking much larger air power outlays. At that time, one or more of the new jet bombers should be ready for mass production.

Opponents of a huge air expansion this year declare that we are in a period of transition from piston to jet propulsion. Many problems still remain unsolved. Because of the great sums involved, they argue, we should be careful not to stock up on planes that will be obsolete when delivered.

That is the dilemma then—whether to order many more planes of current types because of the threat of war or move with some caution and await the development of the jet bomber that will be the weapon of the future.

A Tested Technique

BEARING on the problem are some recent Air Force accomplishments in improving the performance of the B-29. Recent tests of modified superforts give them a radius of action of 2000 nautical miles with 5 tons of bombs. The experiments were under war conditions.

Using refeuling and shuttle bomb technique, Air Force W. Stuart Symington announced, B-29s can take off from Alaska or Labrador, bomb any target in Russia and return to friendly territory.

The techniques are not new in principle. They were demonstrated 20 some years ago by the Air Force "Question Mark" fliers. British Overseas Airways is using the method today. "Tanker airplanes" take off with the bombers, draw along side midway to the target and fire hoses, which are grappled by the bombers.

Chief problem is perfecting the details to make it practical for combat operations. The technique has been worked out in flights over the North Pole in recent months.

Doubles Gas Needs

ONE OBJECTION to the plan is the fact that it nearly doubles the heavy demands for aviation gasoline at overseas bases. This not only complicates the overall demands for gasoline, but steps up logistic problems to such place as Alaska.

All this effectively points up the necessity of maintaining well-balanced defense forces. It should prove to every skeptic that the Air Force requires advanced bases and an Army and Navy to supply and maintain them. This is true whether we rely on B-29s, B-50s or the new jets.

The truth is that the Seversky concept of a globe-ranging bomber which didn't need supporting land and sea forces is in at least temporary eclipse at Air Force headquarters. An order was placed for 100 giant B-36s a year ago, but none have been delivered. The so-called 10,000-mile bomber is awaiting new engines. No more will be ordered.

Present Air Force policy seems to be cooperation with the Army and Navy to close in on an enemy. In another war it should be the major offensive but no lone wolf.

The Scrapfaggot Witch On the Prowl Again

A NEW appearance of the Witch of Scrapfaggot Green, this time in book form, will doubtless inspire a revival of interest in the perverse poltergeist who rated cable stories filed in the village of Great Leighs in Essex County, England, early in October, 1944.

As you doubtless remember, an American bulldozer pushed away a huge stone which had pinned down the witch for 300 years. Villagers said church bells rang mysteriously in the dark hours, scaffolding poles were "scattered like matchsticks" and large haystacks "blew over" on still nights. Also enormous stones were carried considerable distances.

"The Witch of Scrapfaggot Green," by Patricia Gordon, illustrated by William Pene du Bois (Viking) was written for children and others of a mental age consonant with belief in witchcraft.

For a fuller view of the realm of magic, we suggest an equally curious book by Kurt Seligmann, the surrealist artist, called "The Mirror of Magic"—(504 pages, 250 illustrations, Pantheon).

Seligmann combines scholarship with a naive semi-faith in the efficacy of diabolism as an inspiration to artists. His book is rich and quaint and strange, delving into chiromancy, necromancy, alchemy; treating with vampires, werewolves, transmutation, divination and other ungodly subjects.

ONE OF THE BRAVEST men in New York City is Thomas Sugrue, critic, writer and radio personality, who does all his work and supports his wife and daughter (in a midtown Manhattan hotel) from his wheelchair.

Tom, who even shows up at the literary cocktail parties, is suffering from some unknown and undiagnosed form of paralysis. His new book "Stranger in the Earth" (Holt), will give the world a cross-section of his philosophy well integrated with his complete autobiography.

CLYDE BRION DAVIS, whose latest novel, "Temper the Wind," has just been published by Lippincott, was briefly a professional fighter. Matched by mistake with a man who outweighed him by 40 pounds, he was knocked down three times in the first round and decided then and there to discover other means of earning a living. Albert Idell, author of "The Great Blizzard," stayed with the fight and wrestling racket for several years before coming to a similar conclusion.

Book-of-the-Month will distribute Churchill's war memoirs assessed by the five BMC judges as "magnificent." Erskine Caldwell has just delivered his tenth full-length novel to Duell, Sloan and Pearce. It is called "This Very Earth" . . . Ralph Barton Perry's huge Pulitzer Prize-winning biography, "The Thought and Character of William James," has been boiled down (Toynbee fashion) to a single volume to be issued by Harvard University Press.

NOBODY KNOWS the trouble they've seen. But playwrights can occasionally get away from it all by writing a novel about playwrights. Babette Hughes has written one ("The Magic Penny," Rinehart). Her friend, Elmer Rice, will soon be in the process.

On the other hand, novelists often seem to think that the grass is greener along the Rialto. Zelda Popkin, whose latest novel is "Small Victory" (Lippincott), has collaborated with Helene Fraenkel on "Dark Legend," a play to be produced by Eddie Dowling.

I like the title for the first City and Country Reader (Farrar, Straus). It will be called "State of Mind: A Boston Reader" . . . The late Howard Vincent O'Brien's best columns from the Chicago Daily News will be published by Bobbs-Merrill under the column's running head, "All Things Considered."

Maugham omnibuses, Maugham reprints, Maugham's "Ten Greatest Novels;" and now Maugham's nephew, Robin Maugham, starts writing. His first will reveal his experiences with the Arabs, "Nomad" (Viking). I suppose we must bolster empire economy one way or another, if only by paying royalties for exportable Maugham.

STERLING NORTH.

Writer Dorothy Disney Goes Right to the Nosebag for Facts

By Lee Grove

"WASHINGTON is a wonderful place to write in; you can learn anything here," says Dorothy Cameron Disney, veteran mystery story author.

DISNEY

Her experiences indicate the information is here—for those who go after it. And she goes, with all the instincts of a good newspaper reporter, an occupation her husband, Milton Mackaye, once followed here.

When she wanted to learn how to blow up a house, while writing her recently published "Explosion," she consulted a gas company representative.

When she wanted to get facts on heredity for her current novel, she talked to an expert on the subject, and when she wanted to know how a short-wave radio sending set sounded, she called the Federal Communications Commission.

No Writer

"I DON'T KNOW how to describe it," the FCC man said helplessly, "I am not a writer." But he set one up and let her listen to it over the telephone.

That was for her one spy story, "The Seventeenth Letter," which prompted a number of questions. Was it possible, for example, for a girl to jump ship in Halifax during wartime? She called a man here to ask, and he said, "I've just drawn up rules to prevent such things."

Unconvinced, Mrs. Disney took a train for Canada, walked up and down 5 miles of waterfront and saw two places where she thought it possible.

For the same book she wanted to know about camps for enemy war prisoners. Listening to conversations in public places, she learned the location of one, then rode trains back and forth to look at it.

Prompt Answer

ANOTHER time she wanted to know if it was possible to tell if a man found at the bottom of an elevator shaft had fallen or been pushed. She asked the chief of the New York police, who told her it wasn't.

Miss Disney, a slender blonde who has a passion for accuracy of detail, likes to be perfectly familiar with her settings.

In "Death in the Back Seat," she had the murderer come out of a bedroom in their summer home at Madison, Conn. "My husband and I have never liked the room since and use another now," she says.

Didn't Read News

"EXPLOSION was prompted by newspaper pictures of house on Nevada ave. nw., that blew up two years ago.

"The moment I saw the pictres I knew I was going to write a book in which a house would be blown up, so I carefully did not read the news accounts. In my book I blew up the house next door and had the family come here."

"Here" is the Mackaye home at 2817 Woodley rd. nw., where she and her husband and their son, Bill, 13, live.

When writing, which she does about four months a year, she says she neglects the house terribly. "I am not one of those who can run a house beautifully and write three hours a day. Writing is a full time job with me; I even think about it in my sleep."

Mrs. Mackaye, a native of Atoka, Okla., who lived in Washington about 20 years and been writing 18, still remembers her first attempt. "I did it so cleverly I was never able to catch the murderer," she recalls.

Three Short Novels By British Writer

Depends What You Mean By Love is a book of three short novels by the British writer, Nicholas Monsarrat (Knopf, $2.50). Each of the stories explores a phase of man's capacity for devotion. Monsarrat, who served during the recent war in the Royal Navy, has written this book out of his war experiences.

The first story, "Heavy Rescue," describes the little man's love for his job; the second, "Leave Cancelled," is the story of a honeymoon that had to be squeezed into a single night; the third, "H.M.S. Marlborough Will Enter Harbour," deals with a captain's love for his ship.

The novels are well written and give an interesting picture of the British approach to the three problems: jobs, women and duty.

'Missouri Waltz' Re-Examines Truman

It's Not a 'Grudge Book', Says Milligan

By Calvin Manon

KANSAS CITY, April 3 (AP).—Maurice M. Milligan, who sent Tom Pendergast to prison nine years ago, charges that the old Democratic machine is reaching for power again—this time "under countenance from a President of the United States."

The former United States District Attorney for western Missouri makes the statement in a book, "Missouri Waltz," to be published Monday by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Milligan devotes considerable space to denouncing President Truman and his connection with the organization. He discusses at length the 1946 primary, in which the President sought to purge Congressman Roger C. Slaughter of the Fifth Missouri District and asked support of the Pendergast organization for Enos Axtell, Slaughter's opponent in the Democratic primary.

'At No Time . . .'

AFTER detailing the fight against machine rule in Kansas City in the 1930s, which resulted in more than 250 convictions on vote fraud charges after the 1936 elections, and in prison sentences three years later for Boss Tom Pendergast and other machine leaders on income tax charges, Milligan writes:

"In reply to an inquiry in 1944, whether or not the name of Harry S. Truman had appeared in the investigation conducted by my office, I said: 'At no time did the finger of suspicion ever point in the direction of Senator Truman.'

"Sincere as I was then in declaring that no legally demonstrable link existed between Mr. Truman and the mass of corruption we had unearthed; sincere as I was then in permitting Senator Hatch of New Mexico to quote my statement in the Congressional Record; the events of the past three years, the headlines screaming once again of vote frauds and indictments, the attempted subversion of jurymen, the rifling of a vault in the Kansas City Court House itself in order to steal ballots impounded as evidence, make me wonder whether I was right in issuing a clean bill of health.

"In a word, my observations of boss rule in Missouri, flourishing during these years under countenance from a President of the United States and his executive assistants, have dictated the writing of this book. Because of what has been permitted to happen in Missouri between 1944 and 1947, neither I nor any citizen has the right to extend the benefit of a doubt. We gave Pendergastism an exciting funeral, but the corpse has made a notable recovery."

(In Washington, White House Secretary Charles Ross said the President had no comment on Milligan's assertions.)

MAURICE M. MILLIGAN
. . . describes fight on boss rule

Milligan concedes that he may be accused of writing the book to even old scores.

His brother, J. L. Milligan, was the man Harry Truman opposed successfully for the Democratic senatorial nomination in 1934—with Tom Pendergast's support. Milligan himself opposed Truman in 1940 in a three-way race. Truman beat Milligan, and Gov. Lloyd Stark, another of the leaders in the fight to smash the Pendergast machine, by 7000 votes.

In 1938 Truman opposed Milligan's confirmation for a second term as district attorney and nearly broke with the late President Roosevelt over the issue. In 1945, Truman, then President, did not reappoint Milligan.

"This book is my small contribution to the new fight. I realize some of my readers will feel that I am working off a grudge because I was defeated at the polls by Harry Truman. I can only assure them that this is not so, and state simply one of my deepest convictions: when you corrupt my neighbor's ballot, you corrupt mine," he says.

Most of the book is devoted to Milligan's account of the fight on machine and gang rule in Kansas City from 1934, when he took office, until 1940 when Boss Tom Pendergast and his chief lieutenants were in prison and the power of the machine smashed.

HIS book goes extensively into the 1946 primary with President Truman's purge of Slaughter, and the President's open support of Axtell, who won the nomination. Axtell was defeated by Albert L. Reeves, jr., a Republican, in the general election.

In the campaign, President Truman told a press conference he had asked James M. Pendergast to support Axtell. James Pendergast inherited leadership of the remnants of the Kansas City Democratic organization when his uncle, Tom, went to prison.

Axtell lost in every ward except the four key wards under control of the re-born Pendergast machine. His margin in these four wards gave him the nomination.

Milligan writes: "The glorious victory in some precincts smelled to high heaven of fraud. The vote was far too one-sided to be accurate.

"Roy Roberts (managing editor) of the Kansas City Star instructed two returned war veterans to start checking some of the election results. They were joined by other investigators."

Why No FBI Probe?

WHY was not the FBI conducting an investigation of its own?

A 1941 ruling by the Department of Justice forbids the FBI to undertake investigations involving the denial of civil rights without the order of the Attorney General, Milligan writes.

Only a "preliminary" investigation was ordered, he adds.

Milligan then follows with an account of an exhaustive investigation and the indictments naming 71 persons returned by a State grand jury, and the subsequent theft of the impounded ballots from the court house—the evidence on which the indictments were based. Sixty-six of these cases were dismissed because the evidence needed was in the missing ballot boxes. Five cases are pending.

The jury, in returning the indictments, concluded its report with the statement that the extent of the frauds could be gauged only by scientific methods as employed by trained men. It stated its investigation had convinced it that Roger Slaughter had been deprived of the nomination by fraudulent misconduct of voters and other types of fraud.

The jury strongly urged that the Department of Justice and the FBI enter the investigation.

That night the ballots were stolen. This case never has been solved.

Later, however, two special Federal grand juries indicted 39 persons on vote fraud conspiracy charges.

In these cases there have been 11 acquittals, 3 convictions, 1 plea of guilty, 1 no defense plea and 14 dismissals. Two defendants have died.

Yaray Offers Good Study In Character

ONE PAGE MISSING. By Hans Yaray, translated from the German by Elizabeth Reynolds Hapgood. (Holt, $3.)

THE teen age is dangerous enough, but for Matthias Stellenheim, the captivating hero of this novel, the dangers are increased by the separation of his parents, the bigotry of his grandmother, the cruelty of his schoolmates and the stupidity of some of his teachers.

Only Karl Vernon, history professor, can save the boy from the despondency into which a series of quite credible mishaps throws him. He is 12 or 13 at the start of the novel, and we follow him from Vienna to school in Dresden and at last to Strassbourg with Vernon, where in the first few years after World War I, under Vernon's comforting guidance, he enters manhood.

The meticulous, sound development of the boy makes this such an interesting study in character, manners and a bygone way of life that we can easily overlook the slightness of the tension and the dearth of excitement. W. G. R.

Another Tale Of Death of Maria Marten

THE MURDER OF MARIA MARTEN. Originally compiled by J. Curtis in 1828, edited by Jeanne and Norman Mackenzie. (Pellegrini & Cudahy, $3.75.)

"ONE day, 120 years ago, two men dug up the floor of a barn in the quiet village of Polstead, Suffolk (England), and discovered a buried body. Both the corpse, Maria Marten, and the red barn, where she died, have become immortal in the folklore of crime."

That's the way the Mackenzies introduce their book and it is an excellent summing up of the case.

While this is a first extended account of the murder (for which William Corder eventually was arrested, hanged and dissected) to be published in the United States, it appears to have been one of the most widely known and written about crimes on the other side of the water.

The modern editors note that the plot is basically quite simple, and yet the story was the sensation of its day. For one thing, William Corder was able to cover up his murderous activities for many months, part of which time he was living within hailing distance of the famous red barn under which he had buried Maria. Then, there is the point that the actual discovery of the body came through a dream.

Plays were written about the affair, a dream book compiled, and pamphlets and histories published over many years. Very little is known of James Curtis who produced the original book apart from the fact that he was a professional reporter apparently employed by the London Times to investigate the murder and report the judicial proceedings.

The present book comes in quite handy for the criminologist and for readers interested in real-life murders, since a bomb which fell upon the British Museum during the air raids on Britain destroyed most of the books which had been written about "Poor Maria" and her fate.

A Soul's Struggle

The silent and grim struggle of a soul to understand itself is the theme of Hermann Hesse's melancholy novel Demian (Holt, $3). As in his great novel Steppenwolf Hesse tries to get to the core of human values through the self-analysis of his lonely young character Emil Sinclair.

Miss Goudge Improves On 'Green Dolphin Street'

PILGRIM'S INN. By Elizabeth Goudge. Coward-McCann. 346 pp. $3.

ABOUT the best that can be said for the enormously popular novels of Elizabeth Goudge is that they do no harm in the world.

MISS GOUDGE

The author loves human beings, does an adequate (albeit obvious) job of characterization, tells a pleasant story with an invariably happy ending, and affords the reader several hours of effortless escape.

To say that she has learned the craft of writing would be pulling the longbow too far. Her obtuse inner ear permits the following: "Sally put on her white wooly coat . . . sailed down to the street and sallied forth to the Greengrocer's."

But if you can overcome your desire to blue-pencil needless verbiage, revise sentence structure and point up dull paragraphs, you may lose yourself in the sheer flow of the story, this time concerning a postwar English family which buys an ancient inn near the sea in Hampshire.

George and Nadine Eliot and their five children are charmed by the dwelling and its location and move out from London to take over. The aura of the place once owned by a veritable St. Francis, works minor miracles in their lives.

Local tradition has it that a white stag with a cross held in his antlers—a manifestation of Christ—originally dwelt in the woods above the inn. The small Eliot twins, stripping wallpaper from a room that was once the chapel, find fascinating murals corroborating the legend.

And to each of the Eliots this symbol has a prophetic meaning.

Several romances are woven into the story. First there is the broken romance of good and faithful George Eliot and his somewhat pampered wife, Nadine, who has been having an affair with George's nephew, David.

Nadine and George patch it up before the curtain descends. David finds his Sally, while Jim Maloney and Annie-Laurie, who were once vaudeville troupers, banish the shadow between them and will, we presume, live happily ever after.

Meanwhile the children begin to grow toward their future interests and professions under the guidance of Jill, their understanding Nanny.

It is astonishing how a nation as poverty-stricken as the English cling to some of their least defensible luxuries. For instance, in the Eliot family, which has no great amount of money, the wife and mother feels abused unless she has a full-time nurse for the children, a chambermaid and a cook, not to mention a man of all work. It must be pretty tough to be forced to skimp along on only four full-time servants.

This novel is at least an improvement upon "Green Dolphin Street," being devoid the costumery, melodrama and happenstance of that truly appalling best-seller.

GOTHIC PAINTING, by Cyrill G. E. Blunt (Transatlantic Arts; $2.75). This slender volume, one of a series popular in England, contains 45 plates in black and white, 4 in color and a brief survey of the period 1200-1500. Of all the ages of Western art, there is none in which so much confusion still exists about the identity of artists and the ascription of paintings; Blunt at least deserves credit for telling the story concisely without adding to the confusion. W. G. R., (AP).

THE THOUGHT AND CHARACTER OF WILLIAM JAMES, by Ralph Barton Perry (Harvard; $6). Originally a two-volume study, and winner of the Pulitzer Prize when it was published in 1935, this is a condensation, in 400 pages, with enough of the man to make it interesting and enough of the philosopher to make it worthwhile. It is not a popularization—that couldn't happen to a James—but it would help to satisfy the current popular interest in the family. And it may be that, as two volumes were the measure of the importance of pragmatism 13 years ago, one volume is easily adequate today.

THE DIVINE COMEDY, by Dante Alighieri, translated by Lawrence Grant White (Pantheon; $8.50 by subscription). Handsomely bound and boxed, and illustrated with 70 Gustave Dore reproductions, this is a new translation of one of the masterpieces of European literature.

White has spent many years turning this into English blank verse, and it was time well spent. His achievement is vastly superior to Longfellow's, though it falls short of the quality which we expect in immortal poetry.

WILD FLOWER GUIDE, by Edgar T. Wherry (Doubleday; $3). This pocket guide, with its delicately drawn and exact illustrations by Tabea Hofmann, merits a place on the nature lover's book shelf beside the bird guides that have become widely popular in recent years.

Similar in format to the bird guides, it contains more than 400 color and black and white drawings of the native and imported wild flowers of Northeastern and Midland United States. The text is systematized to provide a maximum of information about each plant in small space. Altogether attractive as well as useful.

Coffin Corner

FALSE BOUNTY. By Stephen Ransome. Doubleday. 187 pp. $2.

LYDIA LINDLEY, former wife of Webster Lindley and the widow of his brother, was going to die. Webster planned it that way. She poisoned Web's brother and the slate was going to be wiped clean with her blood.

He waited for the phone to ring informing him of Lydia's death. He heard of a death all right, but it was the wrong one. His carefully laid plans resulted in having Dr. Seymour become a corpse and his stepdaughter accused of the crime.

Web was responsible, but how was he going to prove the girl innocent without committing himself?

MANY A MONSTER. By Robert Finnegan. Simon & Schuster. 220 pp. $2.

DISMEMBERED bodies of young girls about the city is no credit to the police. The papers hounded the police for the maniac who perpetrated these crimes. The police put the finger on Rogan Lochmeister, who was convicted on circumstantial evidence.

Dan Banion, reporter, believed Rogan innocent. It was a tough case. There was no apparent pattern to the murders and the clews were too few and far between. A real challenge!

THE BLUE HOUR. By John Godey. Doubleday. 187 pp. $2.

HARRY CALVERT'S luck was running on the debit side. His wife skipped off with someone else; he kept drinking to forget, and his boss bellowed and threatened about the office hours Harry wasn't keeping.

Then Harry developed a shadow in the form of a man with a crew haircut and a powerful right. His personal papers were being rifled by various gentlemen on the wrong side of the law. Harry pocketed his automatic and became involved in murder and mystery, to say nothing of a new love.

Fast and at times a little too involved. S. N.

Miss Lawrence's 3 Young Ladies

THE PLEASANT MORNING LIGHT, by Josephine Lawrence (Whittlesey House; $3).

Three young women in their middle twenties, Pauline, Stacy and Hanna, are badgered and hounded into marriage by their fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, friends, fellow workers and acquaintances. You don't want to be an old maid, or neurotic, the three cousins are warned; you can't keep a job if you're single, you can't keep friends. So they marry, and two of the three are infinitely worse off than if they had been old maids 10 times over.

Miss Lawrence is one of our most dependable novelists, for she never tackles an unworthy subject. The start and end of this book, her thirteenth, are about up to scratch, though in between there are dull pages.

He Likes Embarrassing Moments

Eastman Bolsters Kinsey Report

By Sterling North

ENJOYMENT OF LIVING. By Max Eastman. Harper. 603 pp. $5.

THIS is perhaps the most outspoken autobiography since Rosseau's confessions. It bolsters the Kinsey report concerning the early age at which a child may have his first erotic imaginings.

Max Eastman, poet, erstwhile Marxist, philosopher and "organic Puritan," was the son of two ministers. His "load of virtue" also included generations of New England and Pennsylvania fundamentalism.

Any reader who had a strict religious upbringing on top of a shy nature, a frail body, a vigilant conscience and a mother fixation will simpathize with this dreamy poet, whose vivid imagination and excitement about ideas kept him in a constant ferment of rebellion.

Max takes delight in revealing all of his most embarrassing moments. But in between these passages the author manages to picture a time, a culture and a way of life. Upstate New York at the turn of the century was an invigorating mental and spiritual climate; and the Eastman colony on Lake Seneca sounds much like a smaller Chautauqua.

The author's courageous mother began preaching when his father's breakdown made it necessary for him to abandon his charge. Later, as the father regained strength, this liberal pair of Protestant divines shared an important pulpit in Elmira, N. Y., where Mark Twain was the most famous of their parishioners

The white-haired humorist was but the first of young Eastman's friends. After college days, when the young reformer went to New York, he rapidly gained a circle of serious-minded acquaintances who helped to shape his life.

John Dewey offered him a job at Columbia and helped teach him philosophy, in return for which Eastman attempted to teach Dewey to write lucid, grammatical English. Neither completely succeeded.

Eastman took up feminism (one of the few males who really helped the movement), wrote poetry and essays and finally took on the editorship of the politely radical magazine, the Masses. As a crusading editor he came to know John Reed, Carlo Tresca, Bill Haywood, Jack London, Art Young, Boardman Robinson, George Bellows and others of a similar caste of mind.

E. W. Scripps and Amos Pinchot were among the tycoons and financiers who helped support this moderately Marxist publication.

But the theme which holds this book together is the endless series of platonic love affairs with a whole series of blondes, brunettes and redheads, every one of whom is described as ravishing. As a picture of endlessly protracted adolescence, this memoir for all its frankness, is perhaps the most frustrating autobiography on record. It was not until Eastman was in his late thirties that he found a girl warm enough and wise enough to cure him of his infantilism.

If you are expecting a profound analysis of Eastman's views on Marxism or the maturity which helped him shake off that violent dream of Utopia-through-bloodshed, you are bound to be disappointed. For one thing, this instalment ends in 1917, long before Eastman despaired of socialism. In this volume his political philosophy remains as dreamy and vague as his eroticism.

MAX EASTMAN
. . . dreamy, reforming

FREE ADMISSION. By Ilka Chase. 319 pp. $3.

I DON'T know whether I have matured or Ilka has since I last reviewed one of her books.

The fact remains that this time I feel myself en rapport with an author who has usually stirred within me dark and murderous impulses.

La Chase continues to offer "indiscretions of a lady of wit and opinion"—a sort of mid-twentieth century female Pepys' diary. To vary the Noel Coward formula of treating duchesses like charwomen and vice versa, she treats tycoons like toy poodles. The mellowing factor consists of the fact that she is very fond of dogs.

Ilka does not tease the reader with half-revealed disclosures. She really tells you all that her mother and her mother's spinster friend ever told her about sex. As H. L. Mencken once testily complained—better to learn it from the gutter.

Is Ilka having a love affair with a married man (and she still married)? Then out with it! Her restrained trysts with a certain surgeon are described in detail.

Seldom do women of the Ilka Chase variety admit admiring other women. But read Chase on Greer Garson. Nothing less catty has recently been recorded between twin attractions at a Hollywood function.

She can be equally entertaining and outspoken about her fear of gypsies as a child; her first vaccination, or lecture-touring the hinterland.

Passages in this book deal with the world of the films, the stage and literature. In Hollywood she found that it was absolutely essential to let semiliterate dimwits imagine they had first conceived every brilliant idea that went into a picture. Her experiences with the mentally underprivileged of the picture industry are well-nigh universal.

As to the subterranean and nefarious financial legerdemain which invariably is associated with producing a play on Broadway, even Ilka was shocked. No normal citizen from Greater America can quite believe the general atmosphere of throatslitting, pocket-picking and backknifing that is considered strictly de rigueur by the highwaymen who call themselves dramatic producers.

Finally that relatively clean indoor sport, book publishing! Ilka thoroughly enjoyed her estate in North Carolina, replete with every known variety of camelia, much Southern hospitality, and the presence of W. Somerset Maugham.

But although Willie Maugham is one of Ilka's favorite authors, she cannot refrain from reciting an episode in which the English novelist, soaked from riding his horse through puddles, attempts to wear the dry socks and slippers of his 6-foot 6-inch publisher, Doubleday.

"I was faint with respect," says Chase, "yet I can only say that the pedal extremities of the dean of English letters resembled nothing so much as Mr. Toad in 'The Wind in the Willows'."

Miss Chase has become less brittle, less superficial, less eager to shock and titillate as the years have mellowed her.

In fact she has finally learned to live comfortably with her own wit, which is a trifle like gradually becoming accustomed to poison ivy. It is still true that a little of the Chase virus goes a long way. But like the eastern monarch trained on arsenic, the reader who takes Chase in small doses over a long period of time can flatter himself that none of her books is likely to be lethal.

ILKA CHASE
. . . wit still has an edge

A Negro Doctor

LOST BOUNDARIES, by W. L. White (Harcourt, Brace, $1.50).

Albert Johnston, doctor in a New England town, was about to receive a lieutenant commander's commission to serve as a badly needed World War II radiologist when the Navy discovered he was a Negro "passing" as white and decided he wasn't that badly needed. The doctor and his wife told their children, and this book recounts what followed. Sounds like another Kingsblood, but this is no novel; it's the stark truth, names, places and all.

States Hard on Margarine

House Oleo Battle Is Only a Starter

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

THE FIGHT to get rid of the 62-year-old Federal taxes on margarine, particularly the 10-cents-a-pound excise on colored margarine, is proving the bitterest of all disputes in this session of Congress.

When the House Agriculture Committee voted 16 to 10 against reporting out any of the 18 bills repealing or amending the levies, the sponsors started after the 218 signatures necessary to discharge the committee.

By cajoling, horse-trading and promising, they got the 218th signature Friday, and the Rivers bill killing all margarine taxes should come up for a House vote the last of the month.

REP. E. A. MITCHELL
. . . He's sold both

Time Limit Sought

BY their very victory, however, the repeal advocates spurred the Republican House leadership to begin casting about for a substitute. There was some talk of a measure simply suspending all the levies for one year. It seems very doubtful, however, that the repealers, with the signatures of a House majority in their pockets, would settle for less than the works.

Republican Floor Leader Charles A. Halleck was anxious to have the question dropped for this session. His party is sharply divided on margarine, between members from dairy sections and others from city districts where food prices are a major issue.

Cloakroom arguments have been so violent that colleagues have feared at times the opponents would resort to fisticuffs.

The most aggressive of the repealers is a freshman Republican, Edward A. Mitchell of Evansville, Ind. Mitchell formerly ran a food agency in which he dealt in both butter and margarine.

Against him, and equally as outspoken, is Republican August H. Andresen—from the dairy country around Red Wing, Minn.

Tax Piled on Tax

SUPPORTERS of repeal admit that the battle in Congress is just the opening skirmish in a war against margarine taxes in virtually every State.

The Federal excise taxes are: Uncolored margarine, one fourth cent a pound; colored margarine, 10 cents a pound; imported margarine or margarine made from imported materials, 15 cents a pound.

In addition, the following Federal occupational taxes are levied: Manufacturers, $600 a year; wholesalers, $480 year for colored margarine, $200 for the uncolored product; retailers, $48 a year for colored margarine, $6 for uncolored.

But that's just the Federal taxes.

In 22 States, including Maryland, sale of colored margarine is prohibited. Four other States add to the Federal tax a State tax of 10 cents a pound.

(Idaho has one law which forbids the manufacture or sale of colored margarine, and another which taxes it 10 cents a pound.)

Secondary Tariff

ELEVEN States have 10 cents a pound taxes on margarine containing imported materials—in addition to other taxes. Louisiana taxes such margarine 12 cents a pound.

Seven States have taxes of from 5 to 15 cents a pound on uncolored margarine.

Nine States have annual occupational taxes, ranging from $1 to $1000, on margarine manufacturers. Thirteen States tax wholesalers from $1 to $1000. Eleven States tax retailers, from 50 cents a year in Massachusetts to $400 in Montana.

Not to overlook any bets, Connecticut has a $3 tax and California a $2 one on eating places which serve margarine.

To sum it up, more than half the population of the country can't buy colored margarine at all. In other places the taxes often total more than half the cost of the product.

Interesting, and difficult to understand, is that many of the most restrictive laws against margarine are in Southern States—the States that raise most of the vegetable oils that go into margarine and that have the least dairying.

Banned in Services

THE dairy lobby was not content with restrictive taxes. It also put through Federal and State laws prohibiting the serving of margarine in public institutions.

Federal laws prohibit margarine in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard and Marine Corps. It is prohibited in Federal asylums, prisons, hospitals, etc. Virtually every State has similar laws.

The crowning triumph of the dairy interests was when years ago, they took jurisdiction over those laws away from the House Ways and Means Committee, and gave it to the Agriculture Committee. They are the only taxation measure not handled by Ways and Means.

The margarine interests have a bill before the Armed Services Committee to permit margarine in Army and Navy messes.

First Intent Forgotten

THE original attack on margarine, then known as "oleomargarine" because of its content of "oleo oil"—an oil generally made from beef tallow and lard—was to prevent its being made or sold "in imitation or semblance of butter." The labeling provisions of the Pure Food and Drugs Act later accomplished this purpose.

Margarine today is made almost entirely of vegetable fats with a liberal use of skimmed milk, the only dairy product in good supply at present. Most used are domestic cottonseed, soybean, peanut and corn oils, and coconut oil from the Philippines.

As the South raises much of the vegetable oil crops, and as most of the large dairying areas are in the North, a natural division between Northern Republican and Southern Democrat results.

But recently soybeans have become a major Northern crop. Many dairy farmers raise them as a sideline. This has complicated things for the butter lobbyists.

Most of the demand for tax repeal, however, comes from city districts.

THE per capita use of butter has declined steadily as prices have soared, and the consumption of margarine has increased.

Butter production in the United States this year is estimated at only 79 million pounds, against 97.5 million in 1947 and a prewar average of 119 million. And the population has increased about 15 million since the prewar period.

Meharry and States Both Would Gain

College Wants South to 'Adopt' It

By Watson S. Sims
Associated Press Staff Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 3.—Meharry Medical College, which may be the first regional school for Southern Negroes, was born of a Negro's kindness to a white man.

Meharry trustees offered in January to turn the 8-million-dollar institution over to the Southern States if they adopted a compact for joint operation of regional schools.

The compact was approved at a subsequent meeting of the Southern Governors Conference at Tallahassee. The 15-member conference already has moved to gain congressional approval of the venture.

Hugh Meharry, one of five abolitionist brothers from Indian Territory, founded the school in 1876. The story, however dates back several years before that to when Meharry, a devout Methodist, was driving a trade wagon across the then wild Midwest.

A storm overtook him one night and his wagon became mired. Meharry was interrupted, in his prayers for deliverance, by an aged Negro freedman.

The Negro fed Meharry and his mules, put him up for the night and dug his wagon free the following morning. Meharry went on his way with a solemn vow someday to do something for the Negro race.

Meharry College occupies 12 acres in north Nashville

Born on Battlefield

MEHARRY saw an opportunity to fulfill his pledge when he was asked to support a Negro medical college at Nashville. The idea was conceived by William Sneed, a Confederate Army surgeon, and George Hubbard, a New Hampshire chaplain and wound dresser with the Union troops. They had discussed it during friendly meetings on battlefields in the War Between the States.

Meharry scraped together $10,000, touched his farmer-Methodist preacher brothers for an additional $30,000, and the school was launched.

Known as the Medical Department of Central Tennessee College for Negroes, its original plant was one bare room in a gloomy basement. Thirteen students were enrolled.

The faculty was headed by Hubbard, as dean, and Sneed. Hubbard qualified himself for the position by taking a one-year course in medicine at Central College. He became president of the independent school of medicine when Central College closed in 1915.

For the 45 years that the pious Hubbard directed the school, a degree from Meharry held little medical significance. The school's graduates, as one writer commented, were "able to sing well and had fine ratings in Bible studies," but were possessed of dubious medical distinction.

Wins 'A' Rating

WHEN Dr. J. J. Mullowney succeeded Hubbard in 1921, however, the college embarked on a program that brought national recognition. Under Dr. Mullowney and his successor, Dr. E. L. Turner, incompetent faculty members were weeded out and funds were raised to expand the college.

Meharry received grants from the Harkness Memorial and Rockefeller foundations. An up-to-date plant was constructed and in 1923 the American Medical Association awarded the college an "A" classification.

The dream of Abolitionist Hugh Meharry has been largely realized in the only medical college in the United States devoted exclusively to Negroes. Located on a 12-acre plot in north Nashville, its facilities include a complete teaching hospital, grade "A" medical and dental schools, a school of nursing and training equipment in all other technologies related to the patient.

It is fully accredited by the Association of American Colleges, it turns out more than 50 per cent of all Negro medical graduates, and its alumni total more than 5000 practitioners of medicine and dentistry.

Consulting physicians include some of the finest medical talent in the South. Several of America's foremost medical men are on the board of trustees. It is the only agency in Tennessee carrying on human cancer research with isotopes.

Of Meharry's present enrollment of 485, some 63 per cent are from Southern States. Administrative personnel, headed by President M. Don Clawson, is largely white. All schools are headed by Negro deans, however, and all full-time teachers are Negroes.

Doctors Use Plane

DESPITE a comparatively small endowment (5 million dollars) and greatly increased costs of providing medical training, the college has continued an aggressive campaign to broaden its benefits.

It operates in conjunction with Negro hospitals in Kentucky, Mississippi and Alabama, and maintains a DC-3 transport plane to carry its medical talent to any point of need.

Meharry is campaigning for an 8-million-dollar Negro veterans hospital to be operated in conjunction with the college. Dr. Murray C. Brown, director of medical education, has enlisted the support of Gov. Jim McCord and several Congressmen in this effort.

The college also seeks inclusion in a plan whereby city and county funds would subsidize care of indigent patients. Of paramount importance, however, is the school's campaign for inclusion in the regional education plan.

10 Years Are Up

IN ATTEMPTING to meet the needs of its growing enrollment, Meharry has drawn more and more heavily on the large foundations. The burden became so great that in 1938 the college was notified that it must find other means of support. It was given 10 years to do so.

This period expires next July 1, and attempts to meet the college's 1-million-dollar annual budget from other sources, including contributions from alumni and the Methodist Church, have fallen far short.

Recent Supreme Court decisions have ordered Southern States to provide equal training for Negro and white students. As a regional institution supported by several States, Meharry could continue and expand.

Arguments have been made for and against the regional plan. Opponents hold that it would do nothing to end the Southern tradition of segregation. The Meharry board of trust, however, is convinced that, through the program, the college can benefit a larger number of Negroes.

Two Medals, And $85 a Month

Last Pole Survivor Keeps Peary Secret

By Saul Pett
From Associated Press Newsfeatures

NEW YORK, April 3.—The old man perked up, blinked misty eyes.

"Long time since any reporter came up here," he said. Yes, he could remember all of it. Some of it wasn't pleasant, but he could remember . . .

Thirty-nine years ago next Tuesday, Comdr. Robert E. Peary, four Eskimos and an American Negro fought their way to the North Pole after almost 20 years of trying. Nobody had done it before. No man since has reached the Pole on foot.

The real rewards of fame have been slow to catch up with Matthew A. Henson, last survivor of that final 133-mile race to the top of the world. It wasn't until last month that a major scientific body remembered to honor him. The Geographic Society of Chicago gave Henson a gold medal.

A Sailor at 12

HENSON lives in obscurity in a small Harlem apartment. He is 81, frail, a little hard of hearing. His vision in one eye is nearly gone from snow blindness.

Born on a poor Maryland tenant farm, Henson went to sea at the age of 12. Nine years later he joined Peary, then a young Naval lieutenant, on an expedition to survey a canal across Nicaragua.

Then they turned north for the next 18 years. Henson became an expert trail blazer and dog team driver. He learned to speak the numerous Eskimo dialects. He became a better hunter than most of them. On the long marches, in the howling winds and 70-below temperatures, which had killed other men or driven them mad, Henson never broke.

Once Matt's rifle saved Peary from being mangled by an enraged musk ox. Another time he nursed his commander's frozen feet, saved him from gangrene.

On one trip, in which they had to eat 34 of their 35 dogs, Peary and Henson established that Greenland was an island. As a result, the United States was able to claim the northern tip of Greenland, which was traded in 1917 to Denmark for $25,000,000 and the Virgin Islands.

But the big moment came on April 6, 1909, on a privately financed expedition. Their ship, the Roosevelt, had taken the Peary party to within 500 miles of the Pole. From there it was a race across thin ice to the Pole and back before the spring tides could set a death trap.

Saved by Eskimo

THE FULL party got to within 133 miles of the Pole. Peary chose only Henson and the four Eskimos to accompany him the rest of the way. The commander and his Negro assistant took the lead alternately, each with a dog team and two Eskimos.

An April 6 Henson started first. Less than 15 miles from the Pole, he suddenly stopped. There was water in the tracks of his sledge runners. The next second he was in the water, his furs and heavy sealskin boots pulling him under. Then he found himself half on ice. One of the Eskimos had saved him.

Before long they were on their way again, racing against a rising temperature which was now up to 15 degrees below. At last they stopped and waited for the 53-year-old Peary. He quickly set about taking observations.

In a trembling voice Peary announced, "Eighty-nine degrees, 57 minutes. The Pole at last!"

The next 30 hours were spent at the top of the world, resting and making many observations to confirm their position. They knew it would be impossible to find the exact 90-degree pinpoint, but in their hours there they must have crossed it several times.

On his return to Labrador, Peary wired the news to America. But instead of finding glory, the tired explorer learned that Dr. Frederick A. Cook claimed he had reached the Pole a full year before. It was many months before Peary's claim was vindicated, and by then the public wasn't much interested.

MATTHEW A. HENSON
. . . "I never have told"

HERE, Matt Henson picks up the story.

"When we got back to New York," he said, "I found myself without a job and broke. I had made only $25 a month on the trip to the Pole. Then William A. Brady, the theatrical producer, wanted me to go on a lecture tour.

"But Peary said no. He didn't say why and it was the first time in 20 years we disagreed. I needed the money and so I lectured. But because of that, I guess, I never heard from Peary or saw him again until 11 years later, just two months before he died."

Matt looked down at his thin fingers. "Peary was a great man," he said, "no doubt about it. Personally, he was a little on the cold side, but we always got along well except . . . Well, we liked each other—as far as it went."

Matt was asked to explain that "except."

His eyes dimmed. He said, "It was just something that happened at the Pole. Just between us. But I'm not saying what. I never have told, not while Peary was alive, and I never will now that he's dead."

Peary was finally retired as a rear admiral with the thanks of Congress, and later was buried as a hero in Arlington Cemetery. Several attempts were made to give national recognition to Henson. They came to nothing.

In 1913 Matt was found working in a Brooklyn warehouse. Finally he received a "presidential appointment"—as a messenger in the New York Customs House at $1000 a year.

Three moves were launched in Congress to retire him on a pension. All three bills died.

Henson worked out his full time until he was retired at 70 on a pension which now pays him $85 a month. His wife still works so they can get along.

Embarrassed Captain

IN 1945, 36 years after the dash to the Pole, Henson received his first reward. The Navy asked him to come downtown to receive a special medal awarded by Congress.

"It wasn't much of a ceremony," Matt recalls. "Just a few of the office help around. A captain, I think, gave me the medal. He read the citation and didn't say anything else until he noticed the date of the expedition on the medal—1908-1909.

"I guess it embarrassed him, because he said, 'This has been a long time in coming.'"

In his living room, Matt proudly exhibits his two medals, and says, "I appreciate them. Yes, I do. But, well, you can't live off them."

Henson spends his time quietly. Occasionally he goes down to the Explorers Club, of which he is a lifetime member, to hear a lecture. He doesn't think much about those days with Peary.

"I try to forget. The hardships, the bad luck. Things like that time with the 35 dogs, you try to forget. It's better that way."

Border Patrol Usually Wins

'Wetbacks' Play a Losing Game

By Harvey Scandrett
Associated Press Staff Writer

LAREDO, Tex., April 3 (AP).—A never-ending game of hide and seek is played in this brush-tangled section of the United States-Mexican border.

The hiders are Mexican workers eager for higher-paying jobs north of the border. The seekers are broad-hatted, trim-uniformed inspectors of the United States Border Patrol, a branch of the Immigration Service.

The base-line of the game in Texas is the Rio Grande, which forms a 1000-mile border between El Paso and Brownsville. Some of the hiders swim or wade the shallow, narrow river. Because of that, all illegal Mexican immigrants have come to be known as "wetbacks."

Others are ferried across for a fee by Mexican boatmen. Logs and washtubs pushed by swimmers have been used as craft. One Mexican mother used rubber swim fins to get her two small children across.

The odds are against the hiders, although a few get through. The penalty for being caught is immediate return to Mexico with a prison term for a second offense.

United States border patrolmen bring in two Mexican "wetbacks" caught crossing the Rio Grande in a boat

Gunplay a Memory

THE game mostly is good-natured.

"We are ordered to shoot only in self-defense," says Elmer B. Debrail, chief patrol inspector here.

But there are occasional smugglers and other criminals among the workers. Hunting of smugglers is the job of the Customs Service, but the Border Patrol encounters them frequently and arrests them when it does.

The last shooting episode in Laredo occurred more than 10 years ago. More than 30 border patrolmen have lost their lives since the service was set up in the mid-1920's.

Much of the land on both sides of the lower Rio Grande is a thicket of mesquite trees, 5-foot high cactus and thorny underbrush. The 86 inspectors use radio-equipped automobiles, jeeps and horses, but travel by foot when necessary. A small airplane is used for spotting. Patrolmen working in the brush keep in touch with one another by walkie-talkie.

"We sometimes chase men 75 to 100 miles through the brush," Debrail said. "We often find them asleep under trees."

Away from the river, inspectors check trains, railroad yards, highways and cheap hotels. Informers also are used.

Tracked to Illinois

MOST OF the Mexicans who succeed in crossing get work on nearby citrus and vegetable farms. Some, however, are smuggled far into the interior.

Three years ago a border patrolman checking highways at Refugio, Tex., noticed that holes had been bored in a large refrigerator truck. He sniffed at one of the holes and smelled sweaty bodies. There were 59 Mexicans inside.

The driver told of two other truckloads which had gone ahead. Seventy-nine more wetbacks were rounded up on tomato farms in Illinois.

Other aliens have been found in the tanks of gasoline trucks and in the water tender of a locomotive.

Wetbacks who are caught must pay their own fare back to Mexico, if they have it. Debrail said the bus used to deport aliens had paid for itself in 18 months and earned enough for a new one.

There is no legal limit to the number of Mexicans who may immigrate to this country. Would-be citizens, however, must obtain birth and good-conduct certificates in their home cities and must have their desirability passed upon by a United States consul. The fee for documents is $10 and there is an $8 head tax for entering this country.

The Mexican government recently renewed an agreement with the United States under which workers may come into this country under six-month labor contracts.

Old Breakfast Table Standby Shows Atomic Possibilities

By Lawrence N. Eldred
Associated Press Staff Writer

CHICAGO, April 3.—Another farm crop coming to the rescue of afflicted humankind is the good old pancake standby, buckwheat.

From this plant comes a chemical substance called rutin, which in its few months of public use has relieved several types of internal bleeding. It does this by strengthening the walls of the capillaries.

To meet national needs for rutin, manufacturers of the medicine estimate that at least 50,000 acres of buckwheat will be required. The entire plant is used around blossom time.

Buckwheat acreage last year was 518,000, the highest since 1930, but much of it was a "catch" crop where corn, oats or soybeans had been rained out in the spring. Addition of 50,000 acres, however, would run the total up to a like comparison with many years ago when buckwheat pancakes were in vastly greater demand. . .

Reports of rutin's value have appeared in various medical and scientific publications. It has been used to prevent bleeding in the brain and in the retina of the eye when these were associated with fragility of the capillaries. This condition also has been reported to occur in about 20 per cent of cases of hypertension (high blood pressure).

Some specialized cases of bleeding from the lungs and the gastrointestinal tract also have been stopped with rutin. Just how it works has not been determined. Its action is known to be different from, but may complement, that of vitamin K, which increases the clotting factor in blood.

New research has advanced the further possibility of rutin therapy to control general internal bleeding resulting from excessive irradiation, such as sometimes occurs in deep X-ray treatments and in atomic explosions. Much more experimental work is needed in this field, however.

Rutin is not considered an immediate cure for ailments in which it is effective, but must be continued for some months. Doctors have found that when a patient under rutin therapy must be given sulfa drugs, too, the rutin dosage must be heavily increased. The sulfas appear to inhibit the action of rutin.

The medicine first was extracted from high quality, flue-cured tobacco, but the yield was low and the cost therefore high. It is most economically obtained at present from buckwheat, although forsythia, violets and many other plants also contain rutin.

Alabama Penal Chief Criticizes Own Setup

By Rex Thomas
Associated Press Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 3.—"We are manufacturing criminals every day . . . Rehabilitation seems to have been forgotten in our penal institutions."

That indictment of Alabama's prison system was made by the man who runs it—plain-spoken Frank A. Boswell.

He told his story in a report to Gov. James E. Folsom on his first year as head of the convict department and its 4500 inmates. Then he proposed some drastic remedies.

First, the stir-hardened convicts who have "passed the stage of rehabilitation" should be isolated in a separate institution with no hope of parole "until they learn to behave." Now they're thrown together with young first-termers in such a way that Boswell says "our segregation is a sham."

The "tough guys"—homosexuals, dope addicts and "mental inmates" not acceptable in insane hospitals—"should be locked in cells to themselves," his report continued.

That would rid the rest of the prison system of the small minority—about 125 men—who "are not going to let anyone enter the penitentiary and make their time as they should."

"We have some who are not going to behave themselves," he said. "They are constantly robbing and taking advantage of other inmates."

The director, who has been in prison work off and on since 1919, also wants a separate institution for teen-age prisoners—a "boys' camp" for first offenders—to meet an "alarming increase" in the number of juvenile inmates and in the percentage of "repeaters."

The latter he blames on association with older, long-term inmates during previous sentences. A recent check at Draper Prison near Montgomery showed 372 inmates under 21—two of them only 14. And 217 of them had been in prison before.

Boswell believes segregation would virtually do away with the flogging which has been practiced in Alabama almost since the Civil War. He was sharply criticized during the early part of his administration for his use of the lash, and Governor Folsom finally ordered it stopped except in "extreme cases."

Boswell says he has held "every job in the department since starting as a $37.50 a month guard. Convicts, who know him as "Cap'n Frank," say he is tough, but fair. When he was warden at Kilby, the State's main penitentiary, he pulled the switch to electrocute more men than he cares to remember. He wouldn't shove the duty onto a deputy.

TIPS ON "TROUBLE FREE" BANKING

Use care in writing checks

When you write a check, write it in ink . . . never in pencil! Checks written in pencil may easily be raised or altered. Also make sure that the amounts expressed in words and in figures agree. GOP Leaders Worried As Pay-Raise Picture Becomes Confused

The pay raise picture on Capitol Hill is cloudy and confused. It has House and Senate GOP leaders worried. Half a dozen conferences were held over the weekend. The general opinion—a pay raise to most Federal workers that would average no more than $500.

But that goal presents many problems. For example:

A check shows that more than a majority of the House Civil Service Committee would vote to boost the $468 flat figure proposed in the bill of Chairman Ed Rees. Also, that at least 15 of the 24 members are committed to split up the Rees bill and to indorse either the Butler or Hagen bill to give the 450,000 postal employes a flat $800 raise.

A veiled threat to "sit on" all pay legislation has been made if that happens. If the Rees bill is increased to, say $600 or $800, the House Civil Service Committee may find itself in the same spot as the Senate.

The Senate Committee Thursday reported out an $800 bill for postal employes and $650 average increase for Classification Act people. The Senate GOP policymakers are dead set against the bill. As one said: "That bill will stay on the calendar until doomsday. It goes way too far and offers too much."

So, there's talk now of doing one of two things:

1. To have the Senate Committee reconsider the bill and cut the $800 and $650 figures to $500 for postal and about $450 for Classification Act people, or,

2. To have a general agreement in advance of Senate debate to scale down the pay-raise figures and to offer the agreement as an amendment when the bill is called up. Otherwise, Senate leaders say they won't bring it up.

Here's a tip—Congress won't act on the pay bill for at least another month. So, don't spend your raise before you get it.

LEGISLATION: The Senate Civil Service Committee has approved bills which would: (1) allow former employes with between 10 and 20 years of service to draw their money, with interest, from the civil service retirement system . . . Also, abolish the Alaska Railroad Retirement System and merge it with civil service.

AFGE: AFL insiders are mentioning the names of several people to succeed James B. Burns as president of AFL's American Federation of Government Employes. Burns is slated to resign soon. Among those suggested for the post are:

George Riley, staff director of the Senate Civil Service Committee; Henry Iler, chairman of the Employes Compensation Appeals Board; Jim Yaden of the Civil Service Commission, and Tom Walters, executive director of AFL's Government Employe Council.

AFL leaders are planning a big campaign to organize white-collar Federal workers into the AFGE.

NOTES: The Civil Service Commission will fire summarily any of its employes who are caught taking sick leave without being ill. The firing will come after the third offense . . . The shortage of skilled and technical workers may force the navy yards to work a 6-day, 48-hour week if Congress votes three billion dollars more for defense. The yards also would need to hire several thousand additional employes . . . No military agency now plans to put its civilian employes on a general 48-hour week. However, a dozen offices are now working at least 44 hours.

ERA: Now that a European Recovery Program is a sure thing, people want to know where to apply for a job in it. The State Department personnel office will accept your application. The office is on the third floor of the Walker-Johnson Building on New York ave. nw. across the street from Emergency Hospital. ERA will have its own quarters in State space when an administrator is appointed.

CAA: After much bickering, the Civil Service Commission has decided by a 2-to-1 vote to uphold the firing on malfeasance charges of a Pittsburgh Civil Aeronautics official. The case has been in the works for about two years. It cost the Government thousands of dollars in the time of officials. Former CAA Administrator Ted Wright became so disgusted with it that he swore he'd never try to fire anyone again from Government. The case is a black eye to the entire civil service system.

NOTES: Hundreds of Federal meat inspectors are on forced holidays because of the strike in the big packing houses . . . Ray Wiser of California is slated to be appointed to replace Carl Farrington at Agriculture. He will be both vice president of Commodity Credit in charge of its purchase program, and deputy production and marketing administrator . . . The Senate Civil Service Committee tomorrow will open hearings on the Bridges bill to permit organized labor to assist in fixing wages of the Government's half million per diem employes. Labor members would sit on the wage boards under the bill. Navy officials will testify first.

Liquor Store Robbed By 'Miniature' Hunter

Cumberland, Md., April 3 (AP).—Clerk Kenneth Walker at a local liquor store told police a short, stocky customer flashed a gun on his fourth trip to the store yesterday and took $600 from the cash register.

He had just asked for the "smallest, cheapest miniature you have."

Tuck Signs Arlington And Fairfax Measures

Two Clarke Bills, One by Fenwick Also Approved by Virginia Governor

Richmond, Va., April 3 (Spl.).—Governor Tuck today returned bills with his signature permitting establishment of a police retirement system for Fairfax County.

Also approved by the Governor was a bill permitting State employes in Arlington County to join in that county's pension and retirement system.

Other measures signed included two bills by Delegates George Damm and J. Maynard Magruder, of Arlington. One provided for the State to withhold from salaries of joint State-local officials any amount which they may be obligated to pay into a local retirement system. The second bill sets $6 a day the pay of the election official who sees the seal affixed to ballots in Arlington.

For Police Trial Board

A bill by Senator Andrew W. Clarke, of Alexandria, provides for a police trial board to hear charges against police members, and to authorize adoption of a police manual for Fairfax County.

A second Clarke bill prevents reduction in the size of a sanitary district if any of its bonds are unpaid, or if any established are in operaton in the area proposed to be severed.

A bill by Senator Charles R. Fenwick, also signed provides that no one shall be put on the jury list who has been called for service withn a year.

Receipts Tax Boosted

Governor Tuck also signed the bill increasing the gross receipts tax on public service corporations from 1½ to 2 per cent, a measure which he recommended to the General Assembly as one of six tax measures in his $14,000,000 a year tax program.

Among 35 other bills signed was the Norris bill which will enable Virginia courts to try Maryland offenders of seafood conservation laws. The act parallels a Maryland act of last year which ended the custom of having each State try its own residents.

Dr. Baker Will Retire At Mary Washington

In a codicil to th will, Tribby bequeathed his 16th st. home outright to his wife, Elizabeth G. Tribby.

After one special bequest of $100 monthly for life to Thomas B. Davis, uncle of the deceased, the will provided for the setting up of a trust fund for the wife and their daughters, Katherine Elizabeth, 8, and Vivian Davis, 6.

It provided that the trust fund remain operative till the children both reach the age of 25, when it will be divided in equal shares to the surviving beneficiaries. In event the wife and both children die before termination of the trust, the will provides that it go to the Central Union Mission and Little Sisters of the Poor.

Luray, Va., April 3 (AP).—Page County Republicans heard a plea for their reorganization last night as J. Everett Will resigned his post as county chairman for the party.

The Republicans picked A. E. Hackley, Luray attorney, as his successor. Herman Cave Stanley and Mrs. Beulah Haines, Luray, were named vice chairmen, and A. R. Painter, Stanley, was reelected secretary treasurer.

I. R. Dovel, commonwealth's attorney of Page County, was indorsed as one of two Seventh District delegates to the national convention and Carl Jenkins won support for reelection to the State GOP executive committee.

Tubercular Patients Set For Transfer

10 at Freedmen's To Go to Glenn Dale If Congress Fails To Provide Funds

Ten tubercular women patients at Freedmen's Hospital will move voluntarily to Glenn Dale Sanatorium if Congress refuses to grant deficiency appropriations to pay their bills, their spokesmen said yesterday.

Mrs. Nell Dejournette, one of the patients, warned, however, that they will stand fast against transfer unless the Commissioners make definite efforts to obtain defiviency funds from Congress.

She said the women had received no reply to last week's letter asking the Commissioners to take such action. "We won't leave thing about it," she insisted. until the Commissioners do some-

"If Congress turns it down, then of course we would have no alternative but to move," she conceded.

Commissioner Guy Mason has announced the Commissioners will inform the Federal Budget Bureau Monday that the District will no longer be responsible for the 10 patients, who refuse to obey the city's transfer order.

The District wants the patients moved because appropriations for care of city patients at Freedmen's have been overdrawn, Health Officer George C. Ruhland explained.

Herman A. Johnson, assistant superintendent at Freedmen's, said last night the hospital will continue to bill the District pending a decision by the Budget Bureau.

He said he received a letter yesterday from Dr. Ruhland clarifying the reasons for the move and expressing the hope that arrangements can be made to send more patients to Freedmen's before next July 1.

Child Marriage Perjury Charged

Truman and Defense Chiefs To Review Army Day Parade

President Truman and Secretary of Defense Forrestal will review the annual Army Day parade on Tuesday as detachments of all the services, sparked by 20 bands, march up Constitution ave. nw. from the Capitol.

STANTON SCHOOL BUILDINGS, DESIGNED FOR 450 STUDENTS, INADEQUATELY SERVE 600

Survey Indicates 1379 Pupils for 450 Seats by '50

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

The Stanton Elementary School, like an outgrown article of children's clothing, is bursting out at the seams.

Nearly 600 children now are crowded into two buildings at Good Hope rd. and Alabama ave. se. The buildings, one a four-room, 40-year-old structure, and the other a 10-room wartime temporary, comfortably hold 450 children.

In September children in the lower grades are scheduled to go on half-day programs.

Parents in the Anacostia area which the school serves have just completed a special census which shows the school will have three times as many children as it has space to put them in two years.

Aroused at the thought of sending their children to a school that will be on a triple shift, they have formed the New Stanton School Committee to petition the Commissioners and Congress for a new building.

A door-to-door count of preschool age children and a survey of new home construction in the area conducted by the committee shows that attendance at the school will reach 1379 by March, 1950.

A Board of Education request for $250,000 to begin construction of a new school was cut from 1949 budget estimates by the Commissioners.

"We are very much concerned with our failure to impress the Commissioners with the seriousness of this situation," said Committee Chairman C. O. Morrison.

But on Capitol Hill last week, the prospect appeared rosier. Representative Walt Horan (R., Wash.), chairman of the House District Appropriations Committee Subcommittee, voiced strong interest. He said "considerable attention" is being given the Stanton school proposal, adding that he saw little "chance of cutting the school budget."

The committee is an area project with representatives of citizens associations joining in with Stanton Parent-Teacher Association to acquire a new school.

Morrison represents the Veterans Cooperative Housing Association which owns Naylor Gardens. The secretary, Mrs. H. R. Hinkes, is education chairman of the Mothers Club of the Naylor Gardens pre-school nursery. She is the mother of two small children who will not go to school for several years. She is working for a new school and full-time classes by time they are ready.

Other groups participating are citizens associations of Knox Hills, Hillcrest and Shipley Terrace, Hilltop Recreation Council and committees from Alabama Gardens, Hillcrest, Good Hope Hills and the Hygee Development.

The committee meets weekly at the home of Mrs. Hinkes, 2816 Erie st. se., to formulate plans for bringing the plight of the neighborhood before the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations when it conducts hearings on the school budget.

Mrs. May T. Kyles, principal of the school, has watched Stanton grow to its present size from a school with two teachers and a handful of children. She was a student at the school when it served a farm community. Later she became a teacher.

During the war years the area changed from rural to urban with large apartment units springing up along new streets. Ten years ago the school population was a hundred, in 1941 it was 200 and by 1943 it had doubled again to 400.

The committee's survey shows there are now 537 children between the ages of 3 and 6 not in school who will be eligble to attend Stanton in the next two years. Wthin that time only 90 pupils now in 5th and 6th grades will graduate to junior high schools.

Without considerng children from new homes, enrollment will increase to 1024.

The committee checked buildings under construction, permits issued and FHA authorizations and found commitments for 592 new housing units.

Using the findings on apartments already occupied as basis for a ratio of 60 children from every 100 apartments, the committee estimated 355 additional children will be ready for Stanton in two years.

"We are looking ahead two years because at the present rate of construction a new school could not be built before that time even if included in the 1949 appropriation," Morrison said.

The committee, he said, agrees with the P-TA that "the project for a new Stanton School should be given top priority equivalent to urgently needed public works projects for water supply, sanitation and fire protection.

"Figures tabulated represent live human children. Their ages cannot be frozen to await the construction of adequate schools at some remote date."

The committee proposed that the Commissioners not try to pay for a new school out of 1948 taxes, but that it be financed by a Federal loan in the same way as "the very apartments from which some of the children come," Morrison said.

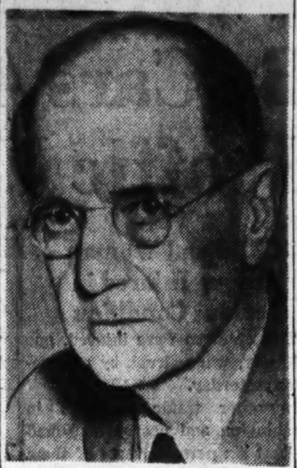
Maurice Latta Dies; White House Clerk

'Indispensable Man' Joined Staff in '98; 'Trained' Presidents



MAURICE C. LATTA
Heart attack fatal

Maurice C. Latta, 78, chief clerk of the White House and its administrative staff member for nearly 50 years, died unexpectedly yesterday at Naval Hospital, Bethesda, Md.

Termed "the White House's indispensable man" and "trainer of many Presidents" by Presidents themselves, he left his desk at the Executive Mansion January 29 to undergo a prostate operation. Reported well on the way to recovery, he died at 11 a. m.

Physicians said he probably suffered an embolism.

Mr. Latta began his work in the White House nine Presidents ago, on July 8, 1898, as stenographer "on loan" from the Interior Department. It took his death yesterday to end that service as retirement regulations were continually waived to keep him there.

"He helped to bridge the transition period when a President died in office," said President Truman yesterday. "I can bear witness to his steadying influence when the duties of the office came to me so unexpectedly three years ago," he added.

Mr. Latta's title was "administrative officer in charge of correspondence" and as such he directed the duties of more than 200 persons who carry on the administrative functions of the White House.

Though he served Republican and Democratic Presidents with equal impartiality, he was admittedly most intimate with Theodore Roosevelt, accompanied him on all his trips as shorthand stenographer and was with him on a "swing" through the country that carried them into each State.

Mr. Latta was born on October 13, 1869, in Westmoreland County, Pa.; was educated in public schools there, and worked in his youth as a farmhand on his father's farm. He left the farm to take a commercial course at Campbell College, Holton, Kans., where he prepared himself for his career.

In September, 1893, he landed his first Federal job, as stenographer in the land office at Perry, Okla., shortly after the Cherokee Strip was opened to public claiming. He later said he regretted missing the opening rush, but recalled the growth within a year of the town, from a few wooden shacks to a thriving center of 10,000 population.

Mr. Latta came to the Interior Department, here, in June, 1898. A month later, he was sent over to help the White House administrative staff, when "a rush of correspondence" burdened its three or four members. He, himself, once said he was never sure when his "loan" ended. He just stayed there from then on.

Six feet tall, of rugged build and mien, he made friends slowly and then often only impersonally. He had no hobbies save his own gardening pursuits, and those who knew him said he seemed to live only for his work and his family, his wife who died nine years ago and their two engineer sons.

His hair turned gray and sparse in his years with the White House. And for several administrations this sober, unsmiling man with his steel-rimmed bifocals became a familiar figure at Congress, delivering Presidential messages, nominations and other important executive documents.

Carried 5000 Messages

"I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate (or the House) a message in writing," he would say.

He once estimated he made this speech more than 5000 times. Often the messages made history, such as President Wilson's message to Congress preparatory to declaration of war.

The White House administrative clerk was made executive clerk in charge of all White House offices in July, 1945, succeeding the late Rudolph Forster, who had joined the White House one year before he did. President Truman, on appointing him, termed him "the White House's indispensable man." Earlier, President Franklin D. Roosevelt had called him the "trainer of many Presidents."

Came Early, Went Late

Mr. Latta was as steady as his influence that President Truman lauded at his death. He reported for work daily at 8:30 a. m., and stayed at the White House until after the President left his desk. For 30 years, he and his wife lived at one address, at 2836 27th st. nw., but at her death in 1939, he went to live at the home of a son, James B. Latta, 315 E. Cedar lane, Bethesda.

Three years ago, because of a heart condition, he gave up gardening, his main love outside of his working hours.

Besides his son, James, an engineer with the Federal Works Agency, he leaves another son, Maurice C., jr., an engineer in the St. Louis, Mo., offices of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Funeral services will be conducted at 2 p. m., Tuesday, at Washington Heights Presbyterian Church, where he was a member and an elder for more than 25 years. Interment services will be private, in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Manassas, Va., April 3 (AP).—The Kiwanis Club's vocational guidance committee here has planned to distribute 1000 chicks to 4-H Club members and Future Farmers of America in Prince William County during April.

Distribution of the chicks will be in charge of Frank D. Cox, County agent, and Raymond R. Fishpaw, County agricultural instructor.

Daniel Kelso, chairman of the Kiwanis committee in charge of the project, said the plan calls for the 4-H and FFA boys to return three 4-pound chickens for each 50 chicks they receive.

Postwar Chicken Improved Model: Better Mileage

Blacksburg, Va., April 3 (AP).—Farmers these days are getting better mileage on their hens—more eggs per pound of feed, that is.

Figures released through the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service showed that the average laying hen last year needed at least a pound less feed per dozen eggs than a few years before the war.

They also showed that the average layer last year produced about 155 eggs, as compared with 122 in 1935. Yet the 1947 egg crop took at least a million tons less feed than would have been required at the 1935 rate of laying, it was stated.

220 Are Auditioned By D. C. Boys' Club

Main Quarters Rock for Ten Hours As Instrumentalists Show Wares

The walls of the main Boys' Clubhouse at 261 17th st. se. were resting last night after echoing a wide variety of instrumental music for more than 10 hours yesterday.

Four rooms on the second floor were the simultaneous sounding boards for auditions which began at 9:30 a. m. and did not stop until the last note of a lone mellophone had died away shortly after 7 p. m.

The auditions were for the National Capital Instrumental Contest conducted by the Boys' Club of Washington for all comers, boys and girls, of the Washington metropolitan area.

220 Compete This Year

There were 220 hopefuls, more than double the number entered in the first contest last year. They tooted, strummed, squeezed (accordions), tickled the ivories, and tapped (a marimba), using 14 instruments on the contest agenda. The marimba was added to the list after Betty Jones, 10, of 1805 Mount Vernon ave., Alexandria, Va., pleaded that she had practiced 7 months on one which she produced on the spot.

"If any civic musical groups like the National Symphony Orchestra are to grow here," said August E. Mascaro, club secretary in charge of the contest, "they will come out of this."

MICHAEL PONTI, 10, of 7506 Dickinson ave., College Park, Md., began to play the piano at 6

Several hundred proud parents and friends constituted the contestants' audiences, and helped overcome the natural nervousness felt by the young artists, many of whom performed for their first time in public yesterday. Judges were professional musicians.

Such a parent was Joseph Ponti, Government employe, whose 10-year-old son, Michael, displayed considerable talent at the piano. His father, who plays himself, hopes that some day the child's talent and two hours of practice a day will lead him to the concert stage.

PHYLLIS GREGORY, 16, of 1613 Lyman pl. nw., has been a cello player for three years

The two hours' practice, confided Ponti, also keeps Michael occupied and out of mischief so that his parents don't have to worry about what he's doing as long as they hear the piano. "Otherwise," said Ponti, "he's terribly wild."

Taught by Sister Genevieve Theresa at the parochial school in Berwyn, Md., and later by a private teacher, Michael is composing pieces himself and has a remarkable repertoire by memory, his father said. He has been playing since he was 6. The Ponti family lives at 7506 Dickinson ave., College Park, Md.

Finals of the contests in each age division, and for each instrument, will be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday as part of Boys Club Week, which begins Monday. Three grand prizes, and prizes for each division winner, will be awarded.

Sixteen member candidates will enter an election Monday for the three positions of commissioners. The winners will preside during the week's Boys Club festivities and on Thursday will visit the District Commissioners' offices to "direct" the D. C. Government for a few minutes.

A whole week of special programs has been planned, ranging from the Biggest Muscle Contest at the Georgetown Branch at 7 p. m. on Monday, to the finals of the Junior Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament at Eastern Branch on Friday, along with numerous other events in between.

Fowl and Animal Permits Required At Bladensburg

Bladensburg residents must obtain permits from the town council to keep chickens, rabbits, pigeons or other fowls and animals under terms of a new ordinance adopted Friday night.

The permits may be obtained from Mrs. Ruth B. Young, town clerk, after a newly named health and safety committee composed of Councilman Carroll F. Palmer and Leonard G. Simpson has inspected the premises and found no health or safety objection. The ordinance prohibits keeping of hogs, however, and does not apply to cats and dogs.

The council will hold a special meeting April 13 at 8 p. m. in the Bladensburg Firehouse to prepare recommendations for the Maryland State Roads Commissions on a proposed traffic survey of Edmonston and River rds. intersections with Defense Highway. The council will also consider the town budget and tax rate.

Employe Arming Laid to Packers

South St. Paul, Minn., April 3 (U.P.).—The striking CIO United Packinghouse Workers Union today accused major packers of arming their employes with canes and blackjacks to provoke violence on picket lines.

Union leaders called on public authorities to protect pickets from "attack and violence."

The statement by the UPW local joint executive board apparently represented the union's counter attack against demands by management that police inforce a court restraining order against strikers mass picketing.

For 6 Per Cent

Red Cross Urges Final Drive Effort

Red Cross campaign volunteers yesterday called for last-minute contributions to bring lagging returns up to 100 per cent of the $1,080,000 goal.

Greater Washington is still almost 6 per cent short of the goal, with $1,021,272 in gifts reported.

final "victory" report luncheon will be held Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. at the United States Chamber of Commerce. The deadline for the drive, scheduled to close last Tuesday, was extended a week to permit last-minute contributions.

A surprise gift of more than $100 was collected Friday night during a musicale at the Chinese Embassy, Red Cross officials reported yesterday.

Volunteers will still call for gifts if contributors call campaign headquarters (EXecutive 0055) or gifts may be mailed to Joseph C. Grew, general campaign chairman, at 1730 E st. nw.

Farmers Advised To Check Color of Sweet Potato Seed

By The Associated Press

The Maryland Agricultural Extension Service is asking farmers to cut or slice each sweet potato seed before planting this spring to make certain it is of the right color.

The service explains that orange-fleshed sweets tend to change in suceeding generations to a white type which is objectionable on the market.

Other points suggested for farmers:

Clean out old seed beds and put in new soil.

Sort seed just before bedding and throw out all rots.

X-Ray Drive Enters 2d Half, Goal 50% Met

The half-way mark in both allotted time and estimated numbers to be examined was passed here last week in the mass chest X-ray survey of Washington.

By last night, slightly more than 306,000 persons had been X-rayed here for signs of tuberculosis, out of a goal of 600,000 by the drive's end, on June 15.

Of this total X-rayed, only 7286 had been advised to appear for second and larger X-rays at the "retake" clinic at Weightman School, 23rd and M sts. nw., it was reported at the survey headquarters there. Experience has shown that a majority of those reexamined are found free of tuberculosis lung infection.

Today, for the first Sunday since the campaign began, January 13, the survey's central unit at 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., was closed. Committee heads said the move was taken to use more efficiently available technical personnel.

The unit, beginning this week, will operate daily excepting Sundays, it was announced.

Similar drives to ferret out tuberculosis in the chests of many adults who do not suspect its presence are being conducted in Prince Georges County, Md., and Arlington and Fairfax counties, Va.

Prison Term Ends Baltimore Man's Double Auto Theft

Baltimore, April 3 (AP).—Gilbert A. Goldstein's slick trick of selling cars he stole and then stealing back was at an end today.

The 34-year-old Baltimorean was sentenced yesterday to five years by Federal Judge Calvin Chestnut after he pleaded guilty to transporting six stolen automobiles in interstate commerce.

Assistant United States Attorney Thomas G. Gray testified Goldstein made $12,875 in less than a year by selling cars he stole. He even carried on his thefts while free on bail here and in New York on larceny charges.

In Police Line-up

Six Women Name Man as Purse Thief

Six women attended a police lineup yesterday to point out James Rice, 27, as the man who had snatched their purses in Southeast Washington.

Police said Rice, an unemployed laborer with no fixed address was arrested Friday night when two police cars converged on him from opposite directions as he attempted to flee from pursuers after his latest purse-snatching episode.

The women who identified him were Mrs. Kathryn Flaherty, of 4008 Nicholas ave. se.; Mrs. Lelia Dement, 813 North Carolina ave. se.; Mrs. Jane L. Lowe, 504 3d st. se.; Mary Pregrin, 706 11th st nw; Mrs. Sally Truitt, 644 South Carolina ave. se., and Ruth Klotz, 112 Irvington st. sw.

Police held Rice on a robbery charge. They say he also is a suspect in 20 other incidents here.

His depredations, they say, occurred during the past three months in the vicinity of 5th and D sts. se. Amounts taken varied up to more than $50.

Mrs. Flaherty was robbed at 3d and E sts. se., about 9 p. m. Friday, while she was waiting for a bus. Police were called immediately.

Two police cars converged on Rice, police said, in a nearby alley. The entire area previously had been scouted for routes the purse-snatcher might take from the scene of his crimes.

He gave up, police related, when he was caught between the headlight beams of the police cars.

May Elected By Catholic War Veterans

M. Joseph May of James T. Brady Post No. 180, Catholic War Veterans, yesterday was elected commander of the District Department CWV.

May, who lives at 4627 Yuma st. nw., was chosen in the election of 1948 officers at the windup of the department's two-day convention at the Hamilton Hotel. He succeeds Dave Bowman, who was elected a trustee.

Other District department officers elected were Angelo Catucci, first vice commander; Fred J. Morthorst, second vice commander; Edward S. J. Peters, third vice commander; Eugene Baczenas, judge advocate; Martin Cook, treasurer; Raymond Gilbert, welfare officer; William Ottley, officer of the day, and Dr. Paul Manganaro, medical officer.

Greetings by Fr. Cowhig

Greetings to the convention, which consisted of about 75 delegates from the 12 District posts, were given by the Rev. James E. Cowhig, who spoke in behalf of Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle.

Father Cowhig urged the veterans, as a group and individually, to "lend wholehearted support" to Archboshop O'Boyle and the parishes of which they are members.

By cooperative action, he declared, the Catholic War Veterans can help to make the new diocese of Washington "the best in the country, or in the world."

Other speakers were Chester F. Naumowicz, manager of the Veterans Administration regional office here, and national commander Max H. Sorensen, of the Catholic War Veterans.

Progress Reviewed

Sorenson, reviewing the progress of the CWV, said the organization had "proved itself to be a bulwark of moral Americanism."

"We have proved to ourselves, to our friends, and to our enemies," Sorenson said, "that we can fight as hard for the principles of justice as we have fought for the principles of freedom."

A military ball in the Burlington Hotel ballroom at 9 p. m. last night concluded the District department's seventh annual convention.

Ingrid Bergman, Rebecca West on Achievement List

Achievement awards of the Women's National Press Club were presented by President Truman to eight outstanding women last night at the club's annual dinner at the Statler Hotel.

Those honored in their various endeavors were:

Rebecca West, British novelist and reporter, international award in journalism;

Ingrid Bergman, star of "Joan of Lorraine," theater;

Dr. Dorothy S. Brady, chief of the cost of living division, Bureau of Labor Statistics, in economics;

Dr. Gerty T. Cori, St. Louis scientist, in science;

Mrs. Helen Rogers Reid, president of the New York Herald-Tribune, for public service;

Representative Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.), politics;

Jean Stafford, author of "The Mountain Lion" and other novels, literature; and

Dr. Laura Zirbes, professor of Education at Ohio State University, education.

Democrats and Republicans alike took a spoofing in the club's annual skit, this year called "Alice in Electionland" and written, directed and enacted by members. The show was seen by one of the largest television audiences in history.

Alice, portrayed by Vera Clay of Newsweek magazine ,got lost in "Electionland" trying to get to Philadelphia. Among those who crossed her path were Harry the Rabbit, acted by Dorothea Lewis, Speaker of the House Joseph W. Martin, jr., Secretary of State George Marshall, Treasury Secretary John W. Snyder, Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) and Mrs. Taft, California's Governor Earl Warren, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), Miss Taxes, Miss Budget and Miss ERP.

The dinner, in honor of the President and Mrs. Truman, was presided over by Miss Ruth Cowan of the Associated Press.

"We 'decorated' our home with LIGHTING!"

WE PUT IT TO THE TEST to see what it would do for our home! Now all of our rooms are warm and welcoming — all of them have brightness and color. Our house is an inviting place . . . a comfortable place to read, work and play. The children love it and so do their friends. There's no harsh glare anywhere and no dingy shadows . . . not since I went over every room and brought the lighting up-to-date!

"This was easy to do. I simply put sight-saving lights in every reading lamp . . . dressed floor and table lamps with flaring shades . . . put in soft, diffused ceiling lights and the right-size bulb in every socket. This banished eye-strain, brought us many beauty benefits. Small wonder my family tells me there's no better buy than low-cost Electricity!"

tomorrow --- if

IF THIS WORLD WERE UTOPIA, tomorrow would be today . . . an era of peace in the hearts of all men. IF we recognize that the time for liberty and justice to all is now, then it will be tomorrow.

IF we sustain the remnant of Jews in Europe and Palestine, they, too, may live to see their tomorrow . . . the beginning of the end of D. P. camps for 250,000 Jews—the beginning of the end of homeless wandering—an era of reconstruction to blot out the tragedy and the losses of an era of six million murders.

IF we measure up to the role that destiny has assigned to America, we shall be the generation that redeemed a people and placed it once more in the path of justice, security and freedom.

Let a full heart guide your giving!

WHAT MUST BE DONE IN 1948

1. Supplementary aid for 250,000 displaced Jews in Germany, Austria, Italy and Cyprus.
2. Relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction for one million Jews in Europe.
3. Immigration and reception in Palestine of 75,000 homeless Jews, including 24,000 children.
4. Housing, retraining and settlement for the newcomers in Palestine.
5. Reception and adjustment of refugees who will enter the United States in 1948.

Playing Chess With U. S. Economy?

The Russians produce great chess players, notably the late Alexander Alekhine, former world's champion, and his likely successor, Mikhail Botvinnik, leader in an international tournament now taking place in Europe. And so arises a horrible thought: Suppose Josef Stalin is playing chess with the American economy!

Livingston

Here's the possible plot: Get the Americans worried. Let them prepare for war. Let them begin building a big military machine all over again. Let them begin diverting materials and manpower from civilian production to munitions. Let them prolong the postwar boom. Then, having frightened them into war preparations, let's become sweet, peaceful souls. Consequence: They'll have the economic bust we, the Russians, have been hoping for.

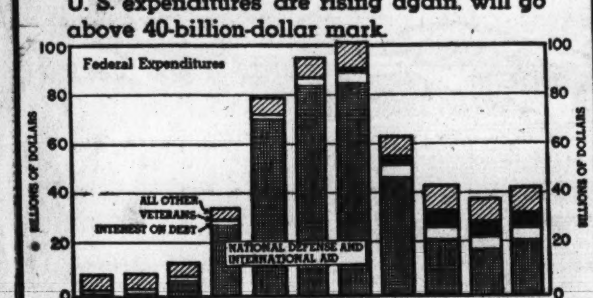
Fantastic Yet Real

The stratagem, admittedly, is fantasy. Stalin's not planting a boom-bust sequence over here. He's playing power politics. Yet events—the things he's doing and the way we're reacting—could conspire toward that end.

Joe has us disturbed. The ease with which the European recovery bill went through Congress is proof of that. And apparently, more and more Congressmen are becoming convinced that we'll have to give Secretary of National Defense Forrestal additional men and materiel.

COLD WAR STATISTICS

U. S. expenditures are rising again, will go above 40-billion-dollar mark.



Data: Bureau of the Budget

Prepared for J. A. Livingston

All this, as noted here last week, is a shot in the arm to the economy. It shows up specifically in the United States budget, which is now on the rise again (see chart). The dominant outlays are for national defense and international aid. The effect is to prolong the boom. Production will take longer to catch up with demand. And prices, which had been gradually moving down, may stabilize or start up again. One of the common explanations of the recent rise in the stock market is that war preparation assures a high level of demand and puts off a recession.

But the aftermath can be unpleasant. If and when we were to come to an understanding with Stalin, war orders would subside. The false, military prop would be removed from the business structure. Prices would decline, unemployment might increase. Capitalism would be put anew to a test. For we would not have the big backlog of orders for automobiles, refrigerators, housing, telephones, vacuum cleaners, etc., we had in August, 1945, when Japan surrendered.

Needed: Plans on Tap

The prospect reemphasizes the importance of economic understanding and foresight at top levels of Government. Obviously, after this shot-in-the-arm phase of postwar prosperity, we must have some prop ready just in case of the happy eventuality that Stalin may tire of the cold war. The President's Council of Economic Advisers can warn, but it's up to Congress to provide the necessary funds.

What's needed, specifically, is a shelf of public works, kept continuously alive. Congress ought to revive the authority of the Federal Works Agency to make advances to State, city and local governments for forward planning—for getting the blueprints ready—for schools, hospitals, airports, sewer systems, parks, etc.

During the depression, we discovered by trial, error, and harsh experience that public spending is necessary when private expenditures drop. We also discovered that there's many a month between the plan and the job.

Lewis Still Makes News

Meanwhile, the coal strike has begun strangling industry. Steel operations last week fell from 96 per cent of capacity to 89 per cent, and unless the coal operators and John L. Lewis get together quickly, further curtailments are unavoidable. The shortage fans out. The New York Central Railroad is planning to close its East Buffalo car repair shops. As many as 725 may be laid off. The Baltimore & Ohio has furloughed 6000 and the Chesapeake & Ohio 13,400 railroad workers.

The coal walkout did not interfere with the traditional last-minute Easter flurry at the stores. Department store sales shot up last week, running 17 per cent ahead of the corresponding week in 1947. In the Cleveland Reserve District, heart of the Nation's steel industry, sales were up 26 per cent. In Chicago, another heavy-goods area, sales were up 20 per cent. Apparently housewives of steel workers did not let fears of laysoffs stop them from shopping.

However, merchants are not entirely happy with results. Easter came a week earlier this year than last year. So last week ought to have been big, compared with the same week of '47. Merchants were disappointed, too, last year—when the rate of sales gain flattened out. But 1947 as a whole turned out well.

New York Cotton

New York, April 3 (AP).—Cotton futures closed 60 cents a bale lower to 5 cents higher today. Trading throughout the session was active. At times the setback amounted to almost $2 a bale as hedging and liquidation were attracted to the market.

Dealers explained that some of the selling was based on technical considerations as a result of the recent sharp price advance which boosted values for some deliveries into new highs for the season.

The turnabout in values today was attributed to trade buying in part believed to represent covering of recent export sales to China.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, April 3 (AP).—The Board of Trade rounded out a century of operations today with the market going higher and trading active in the closing minutes.

The basis of the sudden last-minute buying was not unfamiliar in the board's history—a private report of heavy winds with some dust in the air around Anid, Okla., located in the winter wheat belt. That sent wheat higher and other grains soon followed the upturn.

Earlier the market had lagged in a dull trade. The early selling represented a follow through of yesterday's late liquidation.

At the close wheat was 2 to 2¼ higher, May 2.44¾@2.45; corn was 1 to 1½ higher, May 2.19½@2.19¾; oats were ¾ to 1½ higher, May 1.12¼@1.12⅜, and soybeans were 5 to 6 cents lower, May 3.68.

The "dust blowing" report from Oklahome focused attention on new crop prospects. Some traders felt less favorable reports on crop development are probably due from now on. They said much of the crop was late and might run into hot, dry weather before the harvest.

Otherwise there was not a great deal of news available. President Truman was expected to sign the Marshall Plan for European Recovery, but traders pointed out it was likely that exports of grain under the plan would be less than they have been since the end of the war. May export allocations were slightly lower than those for April.

May export allocations brought the total for the crop year above the minimum goal of 520 million bushels.

Some Stocks Rise Despite Profit Cashing

New York, April 3 (AP).—The stock market today ended its third straight recovery week and liveliest six-session stretch of the year with mild irregularity in evidence.

While profit cashing on the lengthy rise still restrained many leaders, assorted strong spots persisted in the short proceedings. A little buying appeared on hopes of a break in the coal mine impasse following the advice of John L. Lewis to union members that, if they wished, they could return to work. Announcement that President Truman had directed the seeking of an injunction in the mining walkout also was viewed as bullish.

Baldwin Building New Type Engines

Philadelphia, April 3 (AP).—The Baldwin Locomotive Works said today it is building "several" of its new type 2000-horsepower Diesel-electric locomotives for Midwestern and Western railroads.

The new engines will be 74 feet long, powered by two six-cylinder 1000-horsepower supercharged Diesel motors.

They will go to the Atcheson, Topeka & Santa Fe, the St. Louis-Southwestern, and the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroads.

Two more are scheduled for the Trona Railways Co., to be used to speed shipments of Borax on drag line hauls in the Mojave Desert, between Trona and Searles, Calif.

Stock Trading Up 4-Fold on D. C. Exchange

Turnover on the Washington Stock Exchange in the first three months rose nearly four-fold over the same 1947 period.

Sales totaled 36,095 shares in the first quarter against 9314 in corresponding period last year, according to Bernard J. Nees, president of the local exchange.

Total par value of bonds traded was $76,500 this year, as compared with $45,500 last year.

Nees attributed the heavier turnover to distribution of Potomac Electric Power Co. common stock and to "increased interest on the part of local investors in income-producing local issues."

ATTEND PARLEY: Otis H. Ritenour of Washington Gas Light Co. will head a local delegation of controllers who will attend the eastern regional conference of the Controllers Institute of America at Atlantic City, starting Monday. Among those who will attend are F. Charles Brown, National Geographic Society; Harold G. Haydon, Potomac Electric Power Co.; Howard Oberlander, United States News Co.; Robert Garner, Engineering Research Corp., and Millard T. Charlton, local accountant. Ritenour is vice president of the national group and is being boomed for the presidency.

STORE SALES: A surge of last-minute Easter shopping boosted Washington department store sales in week ended March 27 to 11 per cent above same 1947 period. Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, reporting this yesterday, added that local sales in four weeks ended March 27 were 4 per cent better than like period last year. Regionally, store sales in Fifth Reserve District mounted 8 per cent for latest week and 5 per cent for four-week period.

ODD LOTS: J. D. Marsh & Associates, Washington representatives of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., wrote $2,700,721 of life insurance in March, an all-time record for a single month's business of any agency of the company . . . Dollar sales of Regal Shoe Co. in 1947 totaled $10,416,261, the highest level in its history . . . Mississippi Power Co., a subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern Corp., has asked permission of the Securities & Exchange Commission to sell one million dollars of first mortgage bonds to institutional investors . . . Consolidated Retail Stores has arranged a one-million-dollar loan from the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York.

PEPCO COAL: Potomac Electric Power Co. has a 40-day supply of coal and oil. Coal normally accounts for 95 per cent of the fuel used to generate Pepco electricity, but the company has been able to reduce consumption about 250 tons a day because of a tiein with the Conowingo Dam of the Consolidated Gas & Electric Co., which is supplying about 500,000 kilowatt hours a day.

INTEREST RATES: The National Association of Manufacturers has prepared a study of the relation of interest rates and inflation and the present policy of the Federal Reserve Board.

Tire Makers Facing Keen Competition

Akron, Ohio, April 3 (AP).—The Nation's tire makers have overtaken their huge backlog of unfilled orders and they are wondering what comes next.

Some industry sources say a price-cutting war may lie ahead. Others put it more temperately. But industry, they say, is entering a period of the keenest competition it has known in a decade or more.

Whatever it may be, three major tire builders this week announced plans to bring out lower-priced "second line" car tires. The announcement came from Goodyear and Firestone, which, with United States Rubber, make up the rubber industry's "big four."

Certainly the manufacturers, their distributors and their retailers have the biggest inventories of peacetime automobile tires they have held since before the war. But some industry heads say these stocks merely put the tire business on a "normal basis."

Competition "Welcome"

John L. Collier, the B. F. Goodrich Co. president, views the industry situation this way:

"We are entering the keenest competitive era in the tire business but we welcome it. The bottom isn't going to drop out of the rubber and tire industries."

In announcing Goodrich's new lower priced and lower mileage casings Collyer said thousands of motorcar owners demand this type of tire to carry them through until they can get new automobiles.

Generally the "second line" tires retail at from $2 to $3 less than the standard or de luxe lines. Goodyear, for example, will offer one of the cheaper makes in the 6.00-16 size at $12.40, plus excise tax, compared with $15.25 plus tax for the same size in its de luxe lines. Goodrich did not immediately announce its price but it will be even lower then the Goodyear figure.

Mileage Gain Since 1940

From today's standard first-line tire, industry engineers say, the motorist may expect a minimum of 25,000 miles of trouble-free use. In 1940 the figure was 20,000 miles.

What may be expected from the forthcoming second line casings is not indicated. Industry spokesmen say only: "We are going to make the best possible tire for the price."

They make no pretense that the second line tires will match those they sell to the car industry as original equipment. It is wholly possible, however, the mileage potentialities will compare favorably with those of prewar tires.

The tire industry currently has the greatest production capacity in its history—much more than it needs to meet purely civilian requirements. It had less of a reconversion problem following the war then did most other major American industries.

So, with a war-born synthetic rubber source at hand, it got back into high level civilian production on short notice. And whether a price war or just a "healthy competitive era" lies ahead it is in better shape than it ever was to swing into any kind of a military preparedness program in a hurry.

Are present "high profits" justified?

1. During 1947 Union Oil Company made the highest net profit in its history—$18,910,000. That's what the books show. And according to accepted accounting practices that's what happened. But, curiously enough, Union Oil actually spent $675,000 more during 1947 than it took in.

2. The facts behind those figures prove rather dramatically that inflation affects a corporation just as much as it does the average housewife. Here's why. According to accepted accounting practices a corporation depreciates its equipment and charges off its inventories on the basis of what they cost when they were acquired.

3. For example, if a piece of refining equipment cost us $1,000,000 in 1937 and the estimated life of that equipment was 10 years, we set aside $100,000 a year for 10 years. Then theoretically the money would be available to replace that equipment in 1947. If the crude oil in a given well cost us $1 per barrel to acquire in 1937 and we were able to sell it for $2 in 1947, then theoretically we made $1 profit on each barrel of that oil we sold last year.

COST OF STAYING IN BUSINESS		COST OF DOING BUSINESS
EXPLORATION FOR OIL	$10,337,000	RAW MATERIALS	$49,793,000
RESEARCH	1,761,000	WAGES & SALARIES	31,775,000
DRILLING & DEVELOPMENT OF PROVED FIELDS	16,354,000	TRANSPORTATION	12,845,000
REPLACEMENT OF OLD EQUIPMENT & ADDITION OF NEW	12,746,000	TAXES	7,749,000
INTEREST	1,154,000	RENT, POWER, SUPPLIES, ETC.	21,412,000
DIVIDENDS TO STOCKHOLDER-OWNERS	6,537,000		$123,574,000
	$48,889,000	WE PAID OUT	$172,463,000
		WE TOOK IN	171,788,000
		BOX SCORE FOR 1947	—$675,000

4. If 1947 costs and prices had been the same as 1937's—or if we were selling out the business—this method of accounting would give us a true picture of our "profits." But neither of these is the case. That piece of refining equipment had to be replaced at 1947 prices. And since we plan to stay in business that barrel of 1937 crude had to be replaced with a barrel of crude we found last year at 1947 costs.

5. Everyone knows that you can't buy things today for what you did before the war. Refining equipment that cost $400 per barrel of daily capacity pre-war cost $1,000 per barrel in 1947. Our cost of drilling for oil in 1947 was 1¾ times what it was pre-war. And the cost of everything we bought from pipe lines to service stations was up proportionately.

6. Since those higher costs of "staying in business" couldn't be included in the sums we'd set aside for depreciation and reserves, we had to dip into our "profits." So when we got all through, not only did our shareholders receive an inadequate return—only 3% of the year's revenue—but our so-called "high profits" weren't high enough by $675,000 to keep Union Oil Company a going concern.

Chicago, April 3 (AP).—Can matter think?

A New York physician posed this question today in calling for concentrated research on the chemistry of the brain.

Before medical science can get to the core of mental disorders, said Dr. Nolan D. C. Lewis of New York, some answers must be found to these questions:

What is the exact nature of the thought processes? Does the brain produce the mind or is the brain merely the transmission center utilized by some other force? Is mind some special form of matter different from other known forms of matter? Is mind some form of radiation not yet measurable? If mind is matter or energy, can such matter or energy disappear without a trace when a person dies?

Thought, Dr. Lewis said in an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association, is probably a manifestation of energy.

In cretins, persons with marked mental deficiencies, thyroid substances will increase intelligence and change personality. It will increase mental functions and alertness. Poisons and other substances disturb mental functions.

"It indicates that mind is a natural substance of some kind. It is something peculiar in kind. It is invisible yet material," he said.

Chemical tests have shown, he said, that various parts of a person's brain differ in composition. A child's brain contains more water than that of an adult and the total content decreases from birth until death. Copper and zinc increase greatly in the brain after birth. Another chemical, the compound which ultimately forms vitamin D, has its highest content in the brain of the unborn and is rapidly depleted after birth.

Research workers studying degenerative diseases, he said, have found an average of 41 special kind of cells in a certain unit in a young monkey. An aged monkey shows only 16.5 such cells still functioning. In persons 80 or more years old there are only 5 to 6 such cells to the unit, while in normal young human beings there are 20 units.

"The living cell is the seat of life itself," he said. "And an explanation of its protoplasm may explain life. Nuclear chemistry of the living cell may be more revealing than nuclear chemistry of the elements."

Memphis Dogs' Time to Howl; 40,000 of 'em to Get Needle

Memphis, Tenn., April 3 (U.P.).—Monday is the day for 40,000 Memphis dogs to howl.

That's the day the thousands of animals—mutts, purebreds and just plain pooches—start getting worked over with needles in the greatest mass vaccination drive against rabies in American history.

The emergency action was taken on the recommendation of Dr. E. S. Tierkel, rabies expert of the United States Public Health Service.

Tierkel was ordered here after the number of rabies cases reported in the first three months of this year exceeded those for all of 1947. More than 140 persons already have received the Pasteur treatment.

The drive will last 10 days to two weks. Compliance is voluntary.

Tierkel said this was the biggest drive ever undertaken where a rabies epideimc existed.

The leading expert in rabies control in the United States, Tierkel said the Public Health Service now is trying to develop a new antirabies serum.

He mentioned the drives carried out successfully in Montgomery County, Md. In Memphis, dog owners will pay $1.

United Jewish Appeal to Open Funds Drive at Tuesday Dinner

The United Jewish Appeal of Greater Washington will kick off a $2,500,000 fund drive for European relief and Palestine resettlement at a Statler Hotel dinner Tuesday night.

It is part of a national annual campaign, which this year will try to raise 250 million dollars.

Former Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau, jr., national chairman of the UJA, will speak on the European situation and the fund drive at Tuesday's dinner. Other principal speaker is Bartley C. Crum, member of the Anglo-American Commission of Inquiry on Palestine and author of "Behind the Silken Curtain."

At a similar gathering of leading contributors last year, more than $700,000 was pledged.

A city-wide solicitation of Jewish homes by about 3000 volunteers will follow the dinner. Director of the drive is Louis E. Spiegler.

Other beneficiaries of this year's campaign receipts, it was announced, will be refugees reaching this country and local relief groups, including the Jewish Social Service Agency. The bulk of funds, however, will go for overseas aid.

Cochairmen of the drive are Rabbi Isadore Breslau, Joseph Cherner and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld.

Farmers Market Crops Year 'Round In Norfolk Area

Norfolk, Va., April 3 (AP).—The Norfolk area is one of the very few sections of the country that harvest and ship to market carloads of farm produce every month of the year, according to a growers' group here.

The Association of Virginia Potato and Vegetable Growers said unloading reports at large eastern markets show car ortruckload lots of at least three commodities from the Norfolk section are received there every month of the year.

In January and February, when truck crops might be expected to be at low ebb, kale, collards, Hanover salad, turnip greens and some cabbage and spinach go to market from this section, the association said.

Nats Pretty Slick in 3-1 Win Over A's

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

ORLANDO, Fla., April 3.—Billy Evans, general manager of the Tigers, declares that no man within memory of his 40-year association with baseball could go to first base as fast as the Nats' Gil Coan . . . Evans revealed that when he was president of the Southern Association he issued a special bulletin to his umpires not to call Coan out at first until one second after the play was completed. "I saw him beat out hits that I thought were impossible to beat out," Evans said . . . Rocky Graziano, who is giving up his entire purse to charity in his fight with Sonny Horne at Uline Arena in Washington Monday night, is buying $15,000 worth of good will at a time when he can use it. Horne could make a good fight of it, too . . . The Joe Louis-Jersey Joe Walcott fight in June may not be broadcast, because the Republican National Committee is refusing to give up the radio time it commands during the national convention in Philadelphia on the same date . . . Buck Newsom is now buzzing Manager Joe McCarthy of the Red Sox about a job, following a stalemate in his negotiations with the New York Giants. And if the Nats' pitching does not improve, he may get an offer from the Washington club.

POVICH

A NEW GADGET in the Olympic team fencing trials is an electrically equipped sword that illuminates when a "touch" is scored, thus making it easy on the judging . . . The Boston Red Sox, with 16 baseball writers, broadcasters and cartoonists in their camp, are the most covered team in spring training . . . Clark Griffith and Connie Mack will ask for the repeal of the present "bonus" rule in baseball, declaring it can't be enforced and is making cheaters out of too many club owners . . . It's the rule that prohibits a team from farming out a rookie who receives a total of more than $6000 in salary and bonus for signing.

The newest feud in baseball is that of Birdie Tebbetts, Red Sox catcher, with the New York Yankees. The Yankees have been riding Tebbetts loudly ever since he commented with contempt on the catching ability of their man, Yogi Berra . . . There is no rule in baseball laws that prevents Hank Greenberg from being vice president of the Cleveland Indians and playing, if he likes. But if he is traded and joins another club, the rules say clearly that he must sell his stock in the Cleveland team.

THE MOST respected young pitcher to come into the big leagues since Bob Feller is Art Houtteman, the Tiger right-hander, who throws a wicked fast ball and looks mean as he looks the hitters over almost contemptuously . . . Tommy Henrich's wrist injury is so serious that he may not open the season with the Yankees in Washington on April 19 . . . Baseball Commissioner Chandler, in his reconciliation scene with Leo Durocher the other day in Florida, took his text from the Bible when he said: "There is more rejoicing over one who has strayed and returned than over the other 99."

The Giants' third base situation is unsettled, with Rookie Bobby Rhawn battling Jack Lohrke for the job, but Manager Mel Ott is unperturbed. He likes them both and says: "As far as third base is concerned, we're in a position of choosing between ice cream and cake. Is that bad?" . . . The feat of Murry Dickson of the Cardinals in pitching a no-hitter against the Yankees the other day, recalls that a no-hit game was pitched last spring by three St. Louis Browns' pitchers against the Braves. The kick is that the Braves won the game.

THE PLIGHT of the Cleveland Indians is a paradox. With Bob Feller, the best pitcher in baseball on their staff, their pitching appears to be their weakest department . . . Gerry Priddy, who was released by the Nats because they needed more batting power, is the hottest thing in the batting order of the Browns this spring. On consecutive days, he tripled and homered with the bases full.

The Pacific Coast's claim to major league rating suffered a blow the other day when Hollywood's opening game of the season drew a crowd of only 5000 fans and the four league openers attracted only 39,000 . . . Just before he bought into the Cleveland Indians, Hank Greenberg offered to buy the controlling interest in the Hollywood club for $500,000 but was turned down by Owner Bob Cobb . . . Like the ball players, Manager Joe Kuhel of the Nats gets $25 per week for incidental expenses during spring training . . . Eddie Stanky, who says Leo Durocher "knifed me in the back" when Durocher traded him to the Boston Braves, probably was thinking of the nice things he did for Durocher last October just before the World Series . . . It was at Stanky's suggestion in a clubhouse speech that the rest of the Dodgers voted their suspended manager a full share of the World Series—a futile gesture, however, inasmuch as Commissioner Chandler nullified it.

Rocky Looks Bad in Final Boxing Drill For Horne

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Rocky Graziano resembled more the pool room rack boy that he once was than the middleweight champion he is in yesterday's final boxing drill for Monday's bout with Sonny Horne at Uline Arena.

In direct contrast to his powerized exhibition against sparring partner Jimmy Taylor Friday, the Rock could barely get out of his own way.

While another overflow house crowded every inch of the Liberty gym in the hope of seeing Graziano unload against the willing Taylor, Graziano appeared sluggish and just plain tired.

His timing was terrible and the zing that his punches carried against Taylor the day before simply wasn't there.

Handlers not Worried

Neither Graziano, Co-Manager Jack Healey nor Trainer Whitey Bimstein appeared concerned over the Rock's ineptness, however. They know that Rocky is a shoddy gym fighter at best and they also have learned that an amateurish gymnasium exhibition by the Rock usually leads to a smashing performance the night of the fight.

It was that way for the second Tony Zale fight last August when Graziano annexed the 160-pound crown. So, they're rather confident that the dead end kid will give them little cause for concern against Horne Monday. Furthermore, his crown is not at stake.

"After all," said Healey, "Rocky ain't boxed any in nine months, but don't worry, he can still wallop."

Horne, on the other hand, was his usual graceful self in his final tuneup against Aaron Perry. Perry, still a stiff puncher, threw everything he had against Horne, but failed to land a damaging blow.

Perry, incidentally, picks Horne "if the fight goes more than five rounds."

At the behest of the boxing commission the two main eventers held a preliminary weigh-in yesterday. Horne, after a stiff breakfast, weighed 163*, Graziano 160*. Sonny will probably come in at 161, Rocky at 158.

Promoter Goldie Ahearn, of the sponsoring Liberty A. C., estimated that the advanced sale has passed the $25,000 mark, but "there are plenty of seats available" . . . Uline's has been scaled to seat 8200 and a $63,000 house . . . Jersey Joe Walcott and a party of seven wired for eight tickets yesterday . . . There will be no televison and no radio broadcast . . . The bout, the last for Graziano before June 9 title defense against Zale, will be well covered by out-of-town newspapermen, particularly from New York . . . Reservations for 32 working pressmen have already been made . . . Supporting the main event 10 are four six-rounders with Joe Gannon, Washington middleweight, meeting Sid Miller of Kansas City, in the top prelm.

Charlotte Hall Drops Bullis Prep

Lester Mattingly pitched and batted Charlotte Hall Military Academy to a 2-0 victory over Bullis Prep yesterday at Charlotte Hall.

In addition to allowing but one hit and striking out 14, Mattingly drove in both Charlotte Hall runs with a double in the third inning. Bud Ward singled in the seventh frame for the only Bullis safety.

Hoyas' Two Five-Run Rallies Turn Back Dartmouth, 13-8

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Tommy Flynn, Georgetown University veteran, pitched his second victory of the young baseball season yesterday, scattering nine Dartmouth hits for a 13-8 margin at the Hilltop.

In winning their third game in four, the Hoyas jammed most of their power into a pair of 5-run innings after the green Indians had taken a four-run lead n the first two frames.

In the third, Georgetown jumped into a 5-4 lead on doubles by Joe DiLeo and Johnny Moskal, singles by Elmer Raba, Frank Alagia and Ray Corley and such assorted help as Dick Falvey's sacrifice, a wild pitch, a pitcher's error and a base on balls.

The sixth inning, sealing the verdict, was even wilder. After Joe Connors led off with a double, the only hit was Al Naples' single. Three errors, another wild pitch and a pair of walks helped bring the count to 11-4 and there was little doubt of the outcome from there in.

Elmer "The Great" Raba, converted football quarterback, collected a double and two singles in four official times at bat. He also walked twice.

Dartmouth's Emil Hudak hurled the first six innings, giving up 11 safeties, including three doubles. Al Quick relieved and held the Hoyas to two hits and as many runs in the final two frames.

Penn Outlasts Terps, 13 to 11

Maryland played one of its shorter baseball games yesterday. It took the Terps only 9 innings and 2 hours and 50 minutes to drop a 13-to-11 decision to the University of Pennsylvania.

Penn got 15 hits, including two home runs off three Terp pitchers, Bob Keene, Norman Geatz and Bucky Loomis. Loomis was charged with the loss.

Penn's Frank Cooney hit the two homers, one in the first with one on nad one in the fourth with the bases empty.

Maryland overcame a 3-run deficit in the third inning when singles by Al Cesky, Joe Andrus, Bob Moeller and Bob Brewer and a double by Al Tuminski scored five runs. The Terps rallied again in the ninth when Al Cesky's homer with one man on and tied the game at 11-all.

Penn's Ray Dooney and Don Uhline, added a pair of singles to Bob Graham's single to win the game in the ninth. It was the third victory in six games for the Quakers who lost two and tied one in their Southern swing. Maryland has won once in five starts.

Bevens, hero of the famous one-hitter in the Yankees-Dodgers World Series last fall, was battered from the box in his only exhibition game start last week.

Wynn, Scarborough Allow Only 3 Hits; Coan Injures Ankle

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Orlando, Fla., April 3.—Early Wynn and Ray Scarborough turned in a sumptuous three-hitter gainst the Philadelphia Athletics today and the Nats won a ball game. They were no terrors at bat themselves, with only six hits but finished in front, 3 to 1.

Wynn's was the elegant performance. He readied himself for his opening-game assignment against the Yankees on April 19, by holding the A's to one hit—Rudy York's double—in his six inning turn on the mound, and gave up no runs at all.

Scarborough had it a bit rougher. In fact there was some doubt as to how it would all end in the ninth until left fielder, Tom McBride scurried back into deep left center for a game-ending grab of pinch hitter George Bnks long smash with the tying runs on base.

It was a rather slick performance by the Nats' all around. They whacked Lou Brissie, the A's supposedly super-rooke le t hander for all three of their runs, and filched one with a smart double steal.

There was one disturbing item, however. Gil Coan twisted his right ankle on a slide into second base, and limped off the field and out of the lineup for four or five days. It could have been worse, said trainer, Doc Lenz.

Wynn was cutting loose against the A's. His control was slightly off and he walked four men, but York's fourth-inning double was the only solid swat against his curves. It was the best performance of a Washington pitcher to date.

Robertson Launches Drive

Sherry Robertson, who made two of the Nats' meager six hits, singled with one out in the second inning to launch a two-run uprising for the Nats. Young Brissie walked Drake and Yost to fill the bases, and Robertson scored when Evans hit into a force play at second. Evans and Drake then worked a neat double steal that moved Drake home with the second run.

They got their other run in the next inning. It was something of a gift from Shortstop Eddie Joost. After Lyons walked with one out, Joost threw the ball away on a throw to second after fielding Coan's grounder and Lyons took third. Coan tried to take second but was thrown out. It was the play on which he hurt his ankle. A bit later Mickey Vernon whacked a single to center to score Lyons.

After relieving Wynn, Scarborough breezed through the seventh and eighth innings, and going into the ninth the A's were being ignominously shut out with one hit. And then Scarborough went sour.

He walked Majeski with one out and then he pitched a single to Buddy Rosar, Suder fouled out, but Joost scored Majeski with a single to center. George Binks, the ex-Nat, made a vigorous bid to get both of the tying runs home, without luck. McBride grabbed his long smash with one hand on the dead run toward the left-center bush fence.

CONNIE MACK, who is enroute north with his club after breaking camp in Palm Beach yesterday, is even more worried about the A's hitting than Griffith is about the Nats' . . . Previous to today's dismal batting performance of the A's, they were held to three hits by Montreal pitching . . . all of the big league ball clubs will be happy to leave Florida, where the sandy infields invite black eyes from bad-hopping grounders and twisted ankles from hung spikes . . . Connie Mack, 85, and Clark Griffith, 78, will stage a foot race from third to home as a special attraction at tomorrow's game between the two clubs . . . Newsreelmen who will film it, have agreed to speed up their cameras to make the old gentlemen look as if they're whizzing . . . Gil Coan has no luck. Untroubled by sand blisters for the first time in three years he has been in the Florida camp of the Nats, he twisted his ankle on a routine slide today . . . Leon Culberson is also favoring a wrenched ankle, and Second Baseman Al Kozar is out of the lineup temporarily with a damaged finger on his throwing hand.

Griff Spurns Veeck's Offer For Wynn

Orlando, Fla., April 3.—Bill Veeck, president of the Cleveland Indians, who has never been bashful about making his wants known, today attempted without success to talk Clark Griffith out of a pitcher.

Veeck flew into Orlando from Tucson, Ariz., to confer with the Nats' owner and reportedly offered three players for Pitcher Early Wynn. Sitting in Griffith's box during the Nats' game with the Athletics this afternoon, Veeck virtually drooled as he watched Wynn shut the A's out with one hit in his six-inning turn on the mound.

Whatever Veeck's offer was Griffith laughed it off, declaring "he'd have to mention Bob Feller's name before I'd consider a deal for Wynn. Cleveland doesn't have anything else I need badly enough to part with Wynn."

Still Might Trade

The Nats owner is prepared, however, to give up one of his better pitchers — Wynn, Walter Masterson or Sid Hudson—if any club ocers him an outstanding outfielder.

Griffith is at the point where he is tempted to sacrifice some of his pitching to add hitting strength to his outfield, but he won't give up a good pitcher until he see's the eye-whites of what he calls "A Big Outfielder"—more than faintly resembling Joe DiMaggio.

Veeck Buys Russ Christopher

Orlando, Fla., April 3 (AP).—President Bill Veeck of the Cleveland Indians today announced the purchase of Russ Christopher, iron-armed relief hurler of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Veeck completed the transaction while the Athletics were here to play the Washington Nats. The Tribe president said it was a straight cash deal and did not disclose the purchase price, but it was believed to be in the neighborhood of $25,000.

Christopher has worn an athletic uniform for the last six years. He has a major league record of 51 victories as against 62 defeats. Last year he won 10 games and lost 7.

The Washington Redskins have acquired approximately 483 more pounds of tackle insurance, they announce yesterday, bringing their total number of signed players for 1948 to 28.

Don Avery, 258-pounder from Alhambra, Calif., will be seeing his third season in the burgundy and gold. He played freshman football at Alabama and University of Southern California before going into the Army and playing four years of service ball.

Rookie Andy Aitken is a 6-foot-three, 225-pounder out of Los Angeles City College. He was signed by Owner George Marshall on the recommendation of observers who saw him play football in the Army Air Force.

Argument Blamed

Stranahan Reported Barred From Masters Golf Tourney

Atlanta, April 3 (AP).—The Atlanta Journal's golf writer, O. B. Keeler, said today the tournament committee of the Augusta Masters Tournament has barred Frank Stranahan from the event next week.

The Toledo, Ohio, golfer, previously rated the top amateur in the tournament, "is no longer in the field, his invitation having been cancelled . . . after an argument," Keeler wrote.

Stranahan was reported, keeler said, practicing on a very damp putting-green at the Augusta National Golf Cclub, site of the tournament, and was asked to desist. Preservation of the putting surfaces following wet weather was the reason, Keeler said.

"An argument immediately ensued," Keeler said. "And Stranahan, ordered to stop play on the green, announced he was through with the tournament and he was leaving there without delay. He packed up and departed."

The tournament committee considered the squabble, Keeler said, and later announced that Stranahan "certainly was through with the tournament, his invitation being canceled."

Members of the tournament committee and officials of the club were not available for comment.

Meanwhile, it developed that another previously announced entry likely will not appear.

Clayton Heafner, Charlotte, N. C., professional, suffered a badly cut left hand yesterday.

Terps Set 2 Records in Chapel Hill Track

On the Line

—With Considine

NEW YORK, April 3 (INS).—Preview of a Russian Bill Stern broadcasting the United States-Soviet basketball final at the London Olympics:

"Good afternoon, comrades. Don't be alarmed. This isn't BBC or the Voice of America. This is your old Tovarisch Jozef Doakesovich bringing you the exciting play-by-play of the final game of the Olympic basketball tournament, featuring your own intrepid heroes of the Soviet Union's team and the preposterously lucky American five, which has won its last three rounds by 78-0 scores.

Bob Considine

"Well, here we are with five minutes left of the game, and I just want to say that I'm humbly grateful for being permitted to take over this microphone after Comrade Vishinsky's opening remarks, which began a half an hour before the game started and have just concluded.

"The score is now 74-0 in favor of the Americans, but there is no cause to worry. We have been in possession of the ball for the past two minutes and we're freezing it—a maneuver which has completely unstrung the enemy. The enemy now is gathered in mid-court in a huddle and appears to be laughing uproariously, but this is obviously a form of hysteria which must inevitably seize all who are exploited by whip-carrying capitalistic bosses.

"OOP! Comrade Markov, our heroic 5-foot-2 center, who administered a telling overhand right to the navel of the American center, Kurland, on the opening toss, just tripped and fell flat on his kiestervick.

"The ball is rolling over to the little knot of hysterical Americans in mid-court. Kurland picks it up with one hand, yawns, and throws it one-handed through the basket, half the length of the court away. Then he returns to the American huddle. That makes the score 76-0, but there is no immediate cause for alarm because, once again, thanks to the competitive spirit which is the natural fruit of living under a people's democracy, we are in possession. You should see our men handle that ball down under their own basket!

"It is obvious that the American team is about to collapse. Nearly all of its members are the exploited serfs of a capitalistic oil company with headquarters in Tulsa. They are forced to work almost five days a week, in air-conditioned offices, and are paid only $250 a week plus expenses and bonuses. Wow! Pardon me, I meant 'isn't that terrible?'"

"THE other Americans on the floor seem to be students of the University of Kentucky, the team which was the runner-up at the American Olympic tournament held in a den of private enterprise named Madison Square Garden back in March. This is significant. Kentucky might well secede from the remainder of the American team and . . . oop! The American Kurland just reached out and shot another basket from mid-court. But Comrade Markov retained possession of the ball throughout its arc. Kurland shot both the ball and Markov through the hoop, but I see that our official protest has been accepted. The basket counts only two points, which makes the score 78-0.

"One of the Americans just looked at his watch and all members of the team who work for the oil company are sitting down. It seems to be quitting time for them. Our men courageously retain possession of the ball, and now have frozen it so completely that they are forced to don earmuffs when handling it.

"Well, there's the pistol shot ending the game. It missed Kurland, but, as I like to say, 'Wait'll 1952.' Final score, 78-0, but there is no cause for alarm. We take you now to Lake Success, N. Y., where the result will be vetoed in the Security Council by Comrade Gromyko."

SERIOUSLY, the American basketball team for this summer's games will be one of the great all-time combinations, as anyone can attest who saw the Phillips Oilers and Kentucky fight it out the other night at the Garden.

Seven-foot Bob Kurland and Kentucky's comparatively diminutive Ralph Beard were nothing short of magnificent. They had more than 18,000 spectators tearing up the seats from start to finish.

The last Olympic basketball final, by the way, was played in a driving rain and on a big rectangle of German mud. The United States team, led by Joe Fortenberry, beat Canada, 19-8.

Laws and Partner Win in National Figure Skating

Colorado Springs, Colo., April 3 (AP).—An East-West combination—Mary Firth of Seattle, Wash., and Donald Laws of Washington, D. C.—skated off with the silver dance crown today in the national figure skating championship.

Second place in the event was captured by Verna Halliday and Edward Picken, both of the Washington Figure Skating Club.

The winning team was scheduled for an exhibition in last night's finale, during which several additional champions were to be determined in competitions which have extended through the four-day meet.

Dick Button of Englewood, N. J., Olympic figure skating champion, looked like a cinch to retain his senior men's title. Gretchen Merrill of Boston, defending senior lady titlist, however trailed comely Yvonne Sherman of New York slightly in that event.

Maryland Takes Six Of 13 Events

Chapel Hill, N. C., April 3 (AP).—Maryland's Old Liners dominated the third annual Carolina relays here today, breezing to triumphs in 6 of the 13 events, including 3 of the relay races.

Ed Matthews sparked all three of the relays wins. Ike Eichorn took first honors in the javelin, Karl Rubach in the 120-yard high hurdles and Charlie Andrews in broad jump. It was Eichorn's first time in javelin competition.

Four meet records were smashed on a fast track and in perfect weather. The marks were run up in the high jump, 440-yard relay, pole vault and the mile relay.

Slash 9.6 Seconds in Relay

The Old Liners did their finest job in shaving 9.6 seconds off the mile relay standard. With the brilliant Matthews as anchor, Maryland ran the mile in 3:21. The old record of 3:30.6 was set by Duke last year.

There was never any doubt as to the outcome when the lanky, long-striding Matthews, Jacksonville (Fla.) junior, who was 1946 and 1947 outdoor and indoor Southern Conference 440 champion took over on the last quarter.

His forerunners were George McGowan, Mario Salvanelli and Ben Price.

In the 440 relay, Maryland smashed another record, with McGowan anchoring a combination rounded out by Barney Gugul, Salvenelli and Matthews, the quartet running the event in 43.5 Duke also set the old record of 43.6 last year in this event.

North Carolina Second

Jack Moody of North Carolina high-jumped 6 feet 4 inches, to lower by 2 inches the mark he set jointly in 1947 with Dick Dickey of North Carolina State.

The other record went to Gordon Bensley of Yale, who pole-vaulted 12 feet, 10 inches, to cut an inch off the mark established by Fennell of Clemson in 1942.

North Carolina captured three first places to take second honors to Maryland in the relays, in which no team scoring is kept. Seven teams participated in the varsity division. Yale had two firsts, and V.P.I. and Duke, one each.

Sarazen Voted Czar, Babe Approved to Play in National

Los Angeles, April 3. (AP).—Most of the professional golfers in this section think the program needs a czar, Gene Sarazen gets the most votes for the job, and Babe Didrikson Zaharias should be permitted to compete in the National Open here in June.

These and other matters were covered today in an informal poll handed members of the Southern California Chapter, Professional Golfers of America, by Sports Columnist Braven Dyer.

But as to who is the Nation's finest golfer, 30 voted for former National Open King Lloyd Mangrum and 23 went for Hogan.

In the vote on whether golf needs a high commissioner, such as baseball employs, the count was 46 to 13 in the affirmative.

Twelve named Sarazen as their choice, seven picked Horton Smth, five cho[illegible] Bobby Jones, and there were scattered votes for Byron Nlson, Walter Hagen, Tommy Armour, Chick Evans, Willie Hunter—and there was one for John L. Lewis.

Greatest golfer of all time? Hagen, 29 votes; Jones 15, and 10 for Harry Vardon.

Opinion was divided on whether Britisher Henry Cotton's remarks about the touring Amercan pros were justified. Twenty felt he was on the right track in criticising some of the players' tactics, 27 felt otherwise.

The group voted, 45 to 19, to allow Mrs. Zaharias to play in the National.

Annapolis, Md., April 3 (AP).—Navy's baseball team today won its third victory in as many starts by defeating Trinity College, 2-1.

Rightfielder Carl Goodiel's home run in the first inning with Second Baseman Eddie Armstrong on base by virtue of a walk sewed up the game early for Navy.

Navy's Ron Burton gave up only two hits and Trinity's Bill Scully allowed three.

It was Trinity's second defeat in two starts, having lost to Georgetown yesterday.

Triumph Over Incline Pays $18.80

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Bowie, Md., April 3.—Flag Drill, breaking from a ship-shape starting gate, ran away with the $10,000 added Bowie Handicap before 21,010 paid customers today.

Carrying the silks of Chester Hartwick, the 5-year-old hung a three-length defeat on Joe Tucci's Incline much to the delight of scattered backers who reveled in an $18.80 win pay-off.

The day's betting handle was $1,121,171, the first time in the meet it topped the million-dollar mark.

Third money in the mile and a 70-yard battle went to Isadore Bieber's Basileus II, the $40,000 French importation.

Flag Drill ran third to Repand and Incline in the Rowe Memorial handicap here last Monday. That was the day the starting gate broke down and the son of Flint Shot kicked almost as much as the public did about starting by flag.

He did his best to keep Starter William Schamerhorn from getting the field away, delaying the action for mor than 10 minutes. When the break came, he was off poorly.

But today, he came out of the stall gate like a champion, fairly bolting into a four-length lead. From that point to the end, he was not seriously threatened, Jockey Harold Keene coasting him into the wire.

Washington-owned Incline, who appears to be going stale, had to be satisfied with the place money in his second local handicap outing. With Jockey R. J. Martin riding, he had only one excuse—Flag Drill's superior speed.

Five scratches, including that of Rampart, cut the field to six.

Flag Drill, in winning his fourth race of year—three at Oaklawn showed his victory wasn't tainted when he registered time of 1:45 2/5. The track, heavy yesterday, was good as the program began and reached a fast stage, with the help of a bright sun and strong wind before the feature.

The winner took down $7100 today and brought his 1948 earnings to $11,800.

Favorite players took many beatings during the afternoon. The program opened with Jockey Lou Pikor, making a saddle comeback, riding F. Shenski's Our Birthday home at $27.20. In the second, Mrs. Anthony Francis' Twink Shot scored at $35. The "6 and 8" combination paid $338.80 in the daily double.

About the Golfers . . .

Four Schoolboy Stars In Celebrities Golf

By Roger Wolbarst
Post Reporter

Four schoolboy golfers will get their greatest thrill when they compete in the second annual Celebrities Golf Tournament at the Columbia Country Club May 16.

The lucky foursome will be the semifinalists of The Washington Post's fifteenth annual Schoolboy Golf Championship Tournament, which will be played on three area courses.

The 18-hole qualifying round and first and second rounds of match play will be held at Manor Club, May 14 and 15.

Then will come the thrill-packed semifinal during which the youngsters will play before big galleries together with many of the most famous names in this country. The kids will symbolize the cause for which the touranment is held—to bring more boys and girls into sports.

Fred Halligan shot what is believed to be the first eagle ever made on the 432-yard eleventh hole at Army-Navy last week. Halligan holed a spoon shot for a deuce on what Pro Al Burton calls the "hardest hole to birdie on the course" . . . Martin McCarthy, president of the District Golf Association, wrote Women's District Golf Association head Mrs. W. F. Patterson congratulating the W.D.G.A. on its recent decision to inaugurate a junior golf program for area girls. McCarthy suggested a junior mixed Scotch foursome tournament to be played this fall . . . Due to the uncertainty of the weather in early spring, Chevy Chase Club has shifted its Field Day to the fall . . . Carl Courtney shot the first birdie of the year at Washington Golf and Country Club and A. J. Montgomery notched the opening ace of the season at Washington. Montgomery achieved his hole-in-one on the 174-yard eleventh hole using a No. 4 iron . . . Kenwood officially opened its new nine yesterday and 125 golfers gave it a trial. First foursome over the new layout was made up of R. D. Marshall, R. A. Crampton, Milo Christiansen, and Howard Jones. All were agreeably surprised at the good condition of the new holes.

Navy, Baltimore 'Y' Matmen Win

Baltimore, April 3 (AP).—George Weems, Navy Olympics 174-pound star, and Dan Newell, Baltimore YMCA heavyweight, won individual championships this afternoon in the fourth regional Olympic wrestling trials.

Their victories qualify them to represent the Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia region in the National Olypmic trials at Ames, Iowa, April 29.

Weems, a lieutenant commander in the Navy, pinned Pete Georgulas, YMCA middleweight and Baltimore Polytechnic high school student.

Judge Urges Change in Md. Income Tax

Baltimore, April 3 (AP).—Judge Joseph Sherbow has recommended an amendment to the Maryland income tax law so that a taxpayer can deduct any business loss.

At present, the State law allows loss deductions only if it is in connection with the individual's regular practice. Judge Sherbow today suggested Maryland conform with Federal rulings which permit deductions "in any transaction entered into for profit though not connected with the trade or business."

Albert J. Fleischmann, an attorney, ran afoul of the State ruling when he claimed a $15,000 loss on a defaulted loan. Fleischmann had guaranteed the loan by a bank to a fellow stockholder in an oil company.

The State Tax Commission ruled that since Fleischmann was "not engaged in the business of guaranteeing and indorsing notes" he was not entitled to the deduction. However, it accepted as income the interest payments which Fleischmann received for guaranteeing the loan.

"It seems unfair that such a deduction should not be permitted," Judge Sherbow said, after he ruled the commission had interpreted the law correctly. "Maryland taxes the income, but does now allow the loss. It would be well if this were called to the attention of the Legislature."

Budget Action Slated By Manassas Council

Manassas, Va., April 3 (Spl.).—Action on the 1948 budget will be taken by the town council at a meeting April 13. The proposed budget would continue the present tax rate of $1.25 for another year.

Action on a proposed $245,000 improvement and expansion program for the town may also be taken at the meeting. A $150,000 bond issue would be required to finance the project. Town officials are also studying a plan to extend the corporation limits.

Higher Wages Seen Bringing Added Costs

Annapolis, Md., April 3 (AP).—Another special session of Maryland's General Assembly may be called, this time to enact cost-of-living salary increases for State employes.

Governor Lane, though not saying so outright, indicated that such a step was under consideration.

He said he had directed the State budget department to study the report of a special committee on the salary problem. After that study, he said, he would confer with members of the legislative council on what to do next.

The next fiscal year begins July 1. It was believed that any pay hike would be made effective by then.

The General Assembly met last in extraordinary session in November.

If it should convene this summer, State employes' salaries would not necessarily be the only subject for action. Various appropriations for State agencies may be requested and voted at the same time.

State officials recently indicated that they viewed a cost-of-living boost necessary. The problem has also engaged the attention of the legislative council as a factor in acute staff shortages at State hospitals, and mental institutions.

11 Pinball Machines Held for Grand Jurors

Frederick, Md., April 3 (Spl.).—Eleven pinball machines were confiscated in various sections of Frederick County yesterday by sheriff's officers. The machines are being held for the grand jury, which convenes in September, Sheriff Guy Anders said.

No charges have been preferred against the operators, and authorities are reticent to talk about the matter. The machines are licensed in nearby counties, but no official interpretation of the law regarding the devices has been advanced here.

Repainting of Traffic Lines On Virginia Roads Ordered

Richmond, Va., April 3 (AP).—The State Highway Department has started its spring house cleaning by ordering the repainting of traffic lines on nearly 8000 miles of primary highways. Everything paved and over 15 feet wide on the primary system will be restriped.

Most of the traffic "life" lines are wearing thin after a severe winter, engineers said, and must be repainted. Painting of these safety lines is an almost continuous operation, lasting from early spring until fall.

Some heavily traveled roads requiring as many as four separate applications through the year. During the winter months when moisture and cold affect the drying of paint, operations are discontinued except in emergency cases.

Highway engneers regard traffic lines as one of the greatest accident-prevention schemes ever devised. While some motorists still insist on straddling the white lines, the majority of people abide by the law and stay in a lane clearly marked, traffic engineers find.

That is why 100,000 gallons of new white paint and 30,000 gallons or more of luminous glass-beaded paint will be put on the highways of Vrginia this spring and summer.

Traffic and planning engineers have studied night driving problems on heavily traveled roads and in foggy areas and have come up with a map showing some 2500 miles of roads where reflectorized paint will be supplied. Previously used only in trial or unusual cases in Vrginia, the luminous paint is to be appled to all main routes this year, and in many isolated spots susceptible to fog.

While the reflectorized paint is more expensive in price and applicaton than the plain white traffic lines, engineers have found that it is, first more effective for night driving, and second, more lasting.

Fruit-Killing Frost in Va. Is Predicted

Frost was predicted last night for suburban areas of Washington and the interior of Virginia, where fruit crops are endangered.

The Weather Bureau forcast a low of 35 in the city and 26 in the suburbs, although today is expected to be "mostly sunny and warmer, with the highest temperature in the middle 60s."

For Virginia, the forecast was "moderate to heavy frost in the interior and light frost near the coast," warming up today. In the Winchester area, where apple trees are approaching the blossom season, smudge pots were held in readiness.

The Weather Bureau predicted low mercury readings of from 25 to 30 degrees in the interior of the Old Dominion.

A moderate breeze sufficed to ward off a dangerous frost Friday night. The temperature dropped no lower than 39. A low of 26 degrees had been predicted.

A low of 22 degrees in the Winchester area had been forecast for early this morning in low spots. A drap tha low culd ruin the apple yield, orchardists said.

However, they said, if the mercury drops only as low as 25 degrees, some types of trees—and especially those farthest advanced in the blossoming stage—might be affected, they said.

Last week's damaging frost was blamed for reducing red cherry prospects in the Shenandoah Valley area from 20 to 50 per cent. The Shenandoah Valley Cherry Growers Association said this would affect the East Coast's commercial cherry crop.

Va. Farm Service Advises Against Home-Grown Seed

Blacksburg, Va., April 3 (AP).—While it may sound like sensible thrift, saving home-grown vegetable seed is not recommended by the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service.

Extension horticulturists have advised farmers that home-grown seed usually is not as pure a varietal strain as commercial seed. Unless the garden has only one variety of each vegetable and is separated by at least a quarter of a mile from other gardens, cross-pollination will cause "mixing" of varieties in home-grown seed, they said.

They also pointed out that seed from last year's garden may carry diseases to infect the new crop. Seed-borne diseases are found in cabbage, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, broccoli, collards, kale, kohlrabi, mustard, radishes, turnips, beans, peas, tomatoes, peppers, carrots and many other vegetables, it was stated.

Pulp Mill Resumes Full Operations

Covington, Va., April 3 (AP).—"Normal operations" have been resumed at the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Co. plant here, a company spokesman has announced.

He said that for more than a month the plant had been operating "with difficulty" because of the refusal of some men to work overtime or answer "call-ins" for extra work. Now, however, the men are willing to respond to such requests, he explained.

Local 675, United Paperworkers of America (CIO), has denied responsibility for the actions of the men. The union is seeking a wage increase of 25 to 35 cents per hour.

Police Seeking Girls' 'Captors'

Towson, Md., April 3 (AP).—Two men who kept a 13-year-old girl captive in an automobile for two hours were object of a Baltimore County police search today.

The girl told police she was on the way to a Girl Scout meeting last night when two men drove up beside her. When she declined a ride, one of them dragged her in.

The girl said the two made advances, but did not attack her. They released her on a roda near Towson.

$8077 Tax Shortage Going to Grand Jury

Cumberland, Md., April 3 (AP).—Charges that the city tax collector's office is short $8077 will be brought before the April grand jury, State's Attorney Morgan C. Harris announced today.

Tax Collector Charles F. Burke, jr., in whose office the funds allegedly disappeared, commented: "The grand jury is the proper place to investigate such mattters."

Harris said a special audit disclosed the funds were short between March 14, 1945, and June 3, 1947.

Injunction Granted Coach Is Dissolved

Frederick, Md., April 3 (AP).—A temporary injunction restraining the Frederick County school board from suspending Middletown High School Coach Joseph Hardy was dissolved yesterday.

The injunction was recalled by Judge Patrick M. Schnauffer with the understanding that Hardy would appear at a hearing before the board. No date has been set.

School Superintendent Eugene W. Pruitt accused Hardy of undercutting Middletown prices in selling athletic equipment to students and helping coach the Frederick High School football team in defiance of orders.

Hardy's brother coaches the Frederick team.

The teacher-coach obtained the injunction recently on the basis the school board had no authority to suspend him without violating State law and his contract rights.

4-H Members Get 32 Heifer Calves To Start Dairies

Orange, Va., April 3 (AP).—Thirty-two 4-H Club members from 9 counties throughout the State each took home from here this afternoon a Holstein-Fresian heifer calf with which to start a dairy.

This second annual calf party, sponsored by the Holstein-Fresian breeders and the 4-H Club department of the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service, was twice as large as the one last year.

A calf consigned by J. C. Elder of Culpeper kas the favorite and went to Harold Wright of Fauquier County.

Other consigners were Frank and Robert McCamb, Loudoun; Frank Walker, Madison; Curles Neck Farm, Henrico; F. O. Dorey, Henrico; Mrs. Marion Fawcett, Campbell; R. R. Fisher, Louisa; Hollins College, Virginia Tech; Luck Brothers, Hanover; Earl Hawkins, Culpeper; E. B. Orange, Henrico; Mrs. C. L. Spelden, Orange, and R. H. H. Trout, Roanoke.

Taylor Sparks Progressive Bid In West Virginia

Charleston, W. Va., April 3 (AP).—The Progressive Party launched its most intensive bid for a place on the West Virginia electoral ballot today as Senator Glen H. Taylor (D., Idaho) made the first of a series of scheduled appearances.

Taylor, Progressive candidate for Vice President, was in Fairmont today on a press conference, a radio broadcast and a rally. He will be in Huntington tomorrow for the party's State convention. Addresses at Cabin Creek, Logan and Welch are on his schedule.

James Kay Thomas of Charleston, Okey L. Patteson of Mount Hope and R. D. Dailey of Pineville spoke their minds on roads, schools and other State problems at a dinner sponsored by Mercer County Young Democrats last night.

Thomas said the State must have added revenue to start a school building program, suggested a form of "matching" of State funds by counties to help and recommended that a committee be organizer to study the problem. ajhasfig

Col. Bunker's Reburial Rites Set Thursday

Reburial services for Col. Paul D. Bunker, United States Army Coast Artillery, who died in a Japanese prison camp at Taiwan, Formosa, March 15, 1943, will be held at West Point at 2:30 p. m. April 8. He was 62.

Colonel Bunker was born at Alpena, Mich., and was a descendant of James Bunker, one of the founders of Dover, N. H. He was graduated from West Point in 1903, and served in the historical section of the Army War College here from 1928-32.

During the siege of Corregidor he was in command of the big guns of the fortress. When the fort fell, Colonel Bunker cut a fragment from the flag there and sewed it on his shirt. The piece of flag is now on display at the Pentagon Building.

Colonel Bunker was reported to be the oldest West Point graduate in point of service to lose his life in World War II. The Distinguished Service Medal was posthumously awarded to him in 1944 for his work as commander of the seaward defenses at Manila Bay from 1941 until his capture May 6, 1942.

Colonel Bunker was a member of Walter Camp's All-American football teams in 1901 and 102 while playing for the Military Academy.

A son, Lieut. Paul D. Bunker, jr., was killed in 1938 when a bomb he had released from his plane in practice over Honolulu exploded prematurely. Major Thompson Brooke Maury 3d, Colonel Bunker's son-in-law, was also captured at Bataan, and died on December 15, 1944, while being transferred from the Philippines to Japan on a prison ship.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Paul D. Bunker; a daughter, Mrs. Maury, both of Rockville; a son, Col. William B. Bunker, on duty with the Army Office of Transportation in Heidelburg, Germany, and six grandchildren.

Chinese Invited by Reynolds On Disputed Exploration Trip

Nanking, April 3 (AP).—Milton Reynolds offered today to fly eight Chinese scientists over the Amne Machin Mountains to make up for abandoning his search for the world's highest peak.

The hostile scientists who confronted Reynolds said his offer would not be considered until they could confer with colleagues who were stranded at Peiping and Lanchow by his cancellation of the expedition three days ago.

Reynolds and the Boston Museum of Science were joint sponsors of the aerial expedition seeking to determine if western China contained—as suspected—a spot higher than Mount Everest. He canceled the whole thing after his plane was damaged in a take-off at Peiping Wednesday.

Guards Put Around Plane

On Friday Reynolds and his crew made an unannounced flight from and back to Shanghai. Dr. A. P. T. Sah, director of the Academia Sinica, immediately accused him of attempting a "sneak visit" to the unmapped Amne Machins.

[The United Press said Reynolds explained he had started for Calcutta, India, but turned back when he discovered his India visa had expired.]

At Sah's instigation, armed Chinese guards were posted around the plane.

Reynolds denied trying to survey the mountains alone, but admitted he was guilty of "sins of omission." He hurried to Nanking to explain to Sah and the others why he had started back to the United States without the formality of a farewell.

Reynolds, accompanied by a representative from the United States Embassy, said he conceived the new flight offer "last night after those tommy gunners took over my airplane."

His offer to take only Chinese scientists was regarded as an indication that his split was final with the American scientists on the original expedition.

Reynolds told the Chinese, "I'm getting some bad publicity, and naturally I don't like it."

As the meeting broke up he remarked, "If you think I'm in trouble here, wait until I get home to my wife."

Baltimore Pastor To Visit Far East

Philadelphia, April 3 (AP).—The Presbyterian Church in the United States announced today Dr. John H. Gardner, jr., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, will make a six-week visit to the Far East.

The trip has the sanction of the War Department as part of its program to maintain high standards of morals and religion among servicemen.

Senator's Daughter Presented

Spring Debut Season Is Launched at Dance For Cornelia Langer

By Marie McNair

PERT AND PRETTY Cornelia Langer, daughter of Senator and Mrs. William Langer, launched the spring debutante season yesterday at a tea dance given by her parents at the Sulgrave Club.

It was a day of parties for titian-haired Cornelia. She was guest of honor at a luncheon earlier in the day, and went to bed dreamy eyed after Evelyn Kem's dance at the Sulgrave Club last night.

All the flowers in the field—or so it seemed—had been sent to the debutante for her day, filling the drawing room suite of the club.

Senator Langer stood with Mrs. Langer and his daughter, as guests came in. Mrs. K. King Irwin—she was Lydia Langer—was here from her home in Short Hills, N. J., for her sister's debut, and another sister, Mrs. Peter Schaeffer of Purchase, N. Y., had come down for the event.

THE DEBUTANTE'S frock was of white net and lace with a wide, wide skirt and a tracery of silver sequins on the lace bands. She held an old-fashioned bouquet of white rosebuds and lilies of the valley in her hand. Mrs. Langer wore a gown of beige lace made with long skirt and sleeves. A single purple orchid was fastened to her shoulder.

Senators' wives who took their turn at the tea table were Mrs. Dennis Chavez and Mrs. George Malone. Others pouring tea and coffee were Mrs. Tillman Stirling, Mrs. Martin Vogel, Mrs. Allan Balch Mills, Miss Olive Williams, Miss Gertrude Lewis and Miss Mary Irwin, sister of King Irwin.

Assisting Miss Langer were three classmates from Sarah Lawrence—Miss Beatrice Taylor of Providence, R. I., and Jamaica, British West Indies; Miss Mary Lou MacEachern of Richmond, Va., and Miss Betty Bennett of Amarillo, Tex.

Mrs. Harry Clay Williams, who divides her time between Washington and Maplewood, N. J., entertained at luncheon yesterday for her daughter, Nancy, in honor of Miss Langer at the Congressional Country Club.

Other spring debutantes who were guests were Miss Barbara Barry, Miss Patricia Mulligan, Miss Elizabeth Murdock, Miss Edythe Rowe, Miss Rebecca White, Miss Ruth Saul and Miss Elizabeth Murdock.

Then there were Miss Beatrice Taylor, Miss Anna Maria Martins, Miss Gwendolyn Fairlamb, Miss Barbara Glover, Mrs. King Irwin, Miss Anna Marie Zoller, Miss Betty Warner, Miss Anne Belsar, Miss Carter Prescott, Miss Dudley Nicolson, Miss Alice Diggs, Miss Eugenia Showell, Miss Helen Willard, Miss Jean Fress, Miss Jean Hope Willis, Miss Jean Rawley, Miss Robin Stickle, Miss Ruth Stickle, Miss Rita Cleland, Miss Nola Lunn, Miss Edwina Wadden and Mrs. George L. West, jr.

BEFORE starting out for Miss Evelyn Kem's dance, Cornelia Langer, her out-of-town guests and a matching number of beaux were entertained at dinner by Senator and Mrs. Langer at home.

Miss Kem's party was a dinner dance for 35 or 40 of her young friends and a few additional guests coming in later for dancing.

Here for the weekend are Miss Elizabeth Hubbard and Miss Sally Skinner, both of Holyoke, Mass., who were Evelyn's roommates at Vassar. Miss Kem was graduated last year in the accelerated course and Elizabeth Hubbard and Sally Skinner will finish in June.

Here for the festivity are Miss Kem's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Virginius Randolph Shackleford, jr., of Orange Coun-

THE Swedish Embassy, another handsome residence on the tour list, is a treasure trove for lovers of fine furnishings and objets d'art. At an informal meeting of committee members at the embassy, Mme. Legislators' Wives Study To Cut Price Corners

By Genevieve Reynolds

WIVES OF THE Nation's lawmakers are plenty conscious of high living costs. Nagging their spouses to legislate a remedy hasn't brought the quick action they hoped. Now they are taking matters into their own hands by learning to cut price corners. Their method is to become experts in a variety of fields. About 70 have signed up for interior decorating classes, scheduled to begin, Wednesday at the Congressional Club with Genevieve Hendrix as instructor. Another 25 will learn to make their own hats in millinery classes, slated to get underway Thursday.

Mrs. W. C. Resides will come down from New York once a week to teach them how to make new chapeaux, or to remodel old ones. Initiated last year under the Congressional Club's president, Carrie Davis, the hat classes were so popular that the number of pupils this year has to be limited. Around 200 Representatives' and Senators' wives studied "headgear" designing and revamping last spring.

In addition some hundred congressional wives are rounding out their knowledge in dressmaking and designing classes at the club. Fact is some 25 made their own Easter costumes.

By the way, the hat making idea seems to be spreading to other dollar wise groups. Mme. Camille Chautemps, wife of the former French Premier, is scheduled to teach chapeaux designing and renovating to members of the Women's National Democratic Club.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . .? The Senate Dining Room has become so jammed, with women during the lunch hour that many august members of the Upper House have moved across the hall to more private quarters. Well, what can a Senator's wife do but haul the famous men over for introductions? A constituent must be pleased. And they all want to meet the men they have read about . . . Pretty, vivacious Mildred Pepper, wife of the Florida Senator, is in somewhat of a quandry these days, "What is Meant by the Geography of Politics"?

Whitney Finds Easter Laurels Rather Thorny

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

TOWN TRIVIA. Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Cornelius V. Whitney has been ribbed unmercifully since carrying off masculine sartorial honors in the Easter parade. Office pals inquire solicitously, "And what are you planning to wear today, Mr. Secretary?" It is not the first time Mr. W. has been plagued about his clothes. Last year he was included in the "10 best-dressed" list though he hadn't bought a stitch except uniforms since 1939 . . .

IN AN EXCHANGE of visits, Admiral Harry Hill, head of our National War College, will go to England and Air Chief Marshal Sir John Slessor will arrive here Monday. Commandant of the Imperial Defence College, Sir John is the youngest to achieve the rank as air chief marshal.

He was commander-in-chief of the British Coastal Command during the Battle of the Atlantic. Later he was commander-in-chief of the Middle East and Mediterranean and deputy to our Gen. Ira Eaker. Since then he has been air member for Britain's Personnel Council.

One of the most remarkable angles of the air chief marshal's career is that though stricken with infantile paralysis he managed to fox the doctors sufficiently to get into the air force. He has had an operation recently and his leg is still in a plaster cast. . . .

NEWEST AMONG Georgetown's rapidly increasing tribe of authors is Burke Wilkinson. He has come up with an adventure yarn, ""Proceed at Will," due to flood bookshops April 14.

The ways of writers are curious. Burke, who's a Cambridge graduate, worked for publishers Little, Brown & Co. He handled such authors of adventure as Ethel Vance, Helen McGuinness and, after grinding out some 500 book jackets, decided it would be easier to write a book himself!

Little, Brown considered the initial Wilkinson effort so successful that he has given up his job and has almost completed another book. . . .

AT CHEQUIRE HOUSE GALLERY over in Arlington, a new show is opening Monday. The water colors and oils are by "Ten Virginia Artists," Richard Lahey, Margaret and Robert Gates, Eugen Weisz, Virginia Parker, Loren Russell Fisher, Helen Rennie, John Gernand, Mitchell Jamison and Lucile Walford, wife of the Interior Department's distinguished ichthyologist. . . .

IN THESE troublesome times the best escapism we know is sitting in a comfortable chair, in a lovely music room, listening to Mozart. Some 200 friends of music of Dumbarton Oaks did just that two successive evenings in a brilliant windup of the Dumbarton Oaks musical season. The music was played by a quintet of clavier, oboe, violin, viola and violincello, and mezzo-soprano Jennie Tourel sang Mozart's songs most beautifully. As final gesture, Jack Thacher, the director of Dumbarton Oaks, gave a supper in his house. Among the artists present was Igor Stravinsky, who is here to conduct Washington's National Symphony Orchestra.

THINGS WE LIKE ABOUT TOWN. Mrs. Stuart Symington's open weave straw hat with a saucy posy standing up straight in front . . . Senator Clyde Hoey of North Carolina's pearl gray trousers, matching Prince Albert coat and crimson carnation boutonniere. Absolutely the correct costume for a Southern Senator. . . . Mrs. Albert Morgan's box-like handbag made of imitation tortoise shell . . . The nickname given Camille Gutt, head of the International Monetary Fund, by his devoted employes, "Almighty Gutt" . . . Congresswoman "Cassie" St. George's becoming new hair-do—rolled aft and on the sides, banged in front . . . The fact that Senator Millikin, when queried as to the date of the Capitol's construction, didn't know, didn't try to guess . . . Mrs. Morris Cafritz's portrait by Bernard Boutet de Monvel . . . The full-skirted cocktail dress of Mrs. George Malone, wife of the Nevada Senator, its taffeta basque jet-embroidered . . . Senators breaking senatorial rule to welcome back Senator White after his long illness, with a round of hand clapping . . . The truly chic clothes of Mme. Vassili Dendramis, wife of the Ambassador from Greece, which so far have escaped fashion reporters' attention.

The Service Set

By Norma Foust

DEEP sea fishing and rest will be the next duty for the Nation's top wartime air strategist, Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, and his family.

His Air Force colleagues were not surprised by the general's retirement announcement Thursday and President Truman's nomination of Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg to replace him as Air Force Chief of Staff. They knew it was coming sometime this year but were not sure just when.

Mrs. Spaatz reports that ever since she and her husband were sure he would retire they've been looking for a Georgetown home—with no luck so far.

"We need a house of our own so badly now," she explained, "even if just to have a place to store our furniture."

Then, too, Carla Spaatz, youngest of the three Spaatz girls, has one more year to complete at St. Agnes' School in Alexandria. That's another incentive for the Spaatz family to stay in this area after vacating their Fort Myer quarters.

APRIL FOOLS' DAY was the busiest day last week for the Capital's service society. Invitations were out for an unusually large number of parties and they all actually took place—no jokes.

Rear Admiral and Mrs. James A. Clark gave a dinner party at their Arlington home on April 1 for Admiral and Mrs. Richard L. Conolly, who left the next day after a two-weeks' business visit to Washington. The visiting admiral is the top Navy man for the Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean area with headquarters in London.

April 1 was also the date of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Conger Pratt's cocktail party at their Kennedy-Warren apartment.

On the same day, Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. Steven Chamberlin had a small dinner at their Fort Myer quarters.

Then there was Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Lemuel Shepherd's April 1 dinner party, and Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Thomas Powers' cocktail party at Bolling Field.

BUT NOT ALL parties last week were given on April Fools' Day. The second (and last) in a series of cocktail parties and receptions to introduce the new Marine Corps Commandant, Gen. Clifton B. Cates, and Mrs. Cates to leatherneck officers in the Capital took place Friday in the Band Hall of the Marine Barracks. Col. and Mrs. Leonard F. Cresswell had General and Mrs. Cates and a few other guests in for dinner beforehand.

Gen. and Mrs. Albert Wedemeyer entertained approximately 60 of their friends at a cocktail party yesterday at their Fort Myer quarters. And on the same day Col. W. Milstead Talbot (ret.), and Mrs. Talbot gave a buffet supper for their daughter, Barbara, in celebration of her eighteenth birthday.

Capt. and Mrs. J. L. Pratt and their daughter, Gail, and Mrs. William D. Sample plan to leave for a week in Bermuda where they'll visit Commandant and Mrs. Austin K. Doyle.

Wives Study To Cut Prices

She isn't too sure but that's the topic assigned to her for a speech.

VERSATILE Gertrude Forand, wife of the Rhode Island Representative, has a United States Treasury system all her own. In her handbag, she carries five purses, sometimes six. One is for 50-cent pieces, which she collects, another for household funds, still another for her personal spending money. In another colored purse she hoards the dues of the Congressional Club, of which she is treasurer. Then there's a special one for what she laughingly terms "my mad money." The sixth—well that's her secret. But they always are kept in order. Incidentally, brown-eyed, vivacious Mrs. Forand, an excellent dancer and "bowler," can rattle off French a mile a minute. Apparently her spouse, Aime, knows the language well, too. Friends often hear her telephoning and speaking to him the romance language.

BITS of This and That . . . Much sought after by matrimony-minded women across the country is Speaker of the House Joe Martin. An able altar dodger, blue-eyed, bedimpled Joe will be on the spot again when the Congressional Club honors him at a reception today, 4 to 6 p. m., at 2001 New Hampshire ave. There are bound to be a few Leap Year hopefuls around . . . Mrs. Willis Bradley, wife of the California Representative, is chairman of a costume dance supper. The Congressional crowd will show up in 1908 period clothes . . . Senator Claude Pepper of Florida can hold up under the most gruelling speech-making jaunts. Last Friday he spoke in Chicago, Saturday in Montgomery, Ala., and Monday night he addressed a crowd in Jacksonville, Fla.—his home State.

Lampooning the Politicoes

POLITICAL bigwigs came in for a jolly good share of ribbing at the annual stunt party and dinner given last night at the Statler Hotel by members of the Women's National Press Club. Diplomatic Circling

SPRING's spring around the globe. Irish apple blossoms cover acres of green fields, drenched in beautiful misty rain. In Lebanon orchards bloom with pale pink orange blossoms and white-petaled almond flowers. Pakistan is spiced with jasmin and exotic gold mohur, and in China yellow tea blossoms blend with fields of pink peonies.

Gardens and palace courtyards of Italy are filled with music as soon as flowers appear. Open-air concerts start early in spring

Diplomats from these far-away lands find spring in Washington has the beauty to which they are accustomed. Parties, illumined with flowers indoors and out, take on a new brightness at this season.

ONE OF the most interesting gatherings of the week was the cocktail party given Thursday by Miss Meredith Howard in honor of Walter Winchell. Diplomatic guests included Mme. Bonnet, Mrs. Thors and her pretty daughter, Margret, the Dutch Minister, Jonkheer O. Reuchlin; the new British Minister, Hoyer Miller, and the Danish Counselor and Mme. Bertelsen.

Mingling with the diplomats were the Chief Justice and Mrs. Vinson, Mrs. George Mesta, Admiral Emory Scott Land, Mrs. Harold Coolidge, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Arthur Vandenberg, jr., and others.

Walter Winchell told Arthur Vandenberg a story about his father, the Senator. Years ago, when introduced to the commentator, Senator Vandenberg gazed at him sadly for quite a while. Then clasping his head in his hands, he walked away exclaiming, "He's so nice looking, and he says such terrible things."

The Saudi-Arabians have opened a new legation at Tehran, Iran. And the Iranians have done likewise in Jeddah. Diplomatic relations were severed for about two years over an incident connected with the pilgrimage to Mecca.

Only Flaw in Otherwise Blissful Marriage From Wife's Viewpoint Is Her Nine Years Seniority to Husband, Which Worries Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 35 years old, my husband is 26, and we have been married 14 months. This is my second marriage and his first.

We are very much in love and get along fine. We have always been honest with each other and he is very sweet to me. I just couldn't ask for a better husband or a more handsome one; but what worries me is the difference in our ages.

At the time we married I asked him if he wanted me to say I was younger, but he said, "No, tell the truth; it doesn't matter." And it never seems to bother him that I am nine years older.

I haven't met my in-laws yet, but we plan to visit them in August, and when I asked my husband if he is going to tell them my age, he said, "We sure will if they ask. Don't lie about it. It's none of their business. You are my wife and I am old enough to know what I want, so don't let it worry you."

She Fears Telling His Doting Mother

HE WASN'T writing to his family at the time we married, due to some family quarrel; and I don't yet know what it was all about, as he doesn't say much about them.

However, six months ago he wrote his mother about our marriage and she wrote back saying that she hoped he had a wife who was good enough for him. He is the youngest of her five children, and now she writes me very nice letters; and also has sent us a wedding present. But I wonder if she will be as nice after she learns I am nine years older than her baby boy?

I don't look older than 27 or 28, except that my hair is turning gray. I might dye my hair to make myself look a little younger, but my husband won't let me dye my hair. And I don't have money to get myself really fixed up, or I would do just that. I am really worried about meeting my in-laws and being so much older than Don, but am I letting my imagination run away with me? Please advise.

D. W.

Wife's Anxiety Is Unjustified

DEAR D. W.: Some sage has said that a man is as old as he feels and a woman is as old as she looks, and I think most men and women would agree there is a lot of truth in it.

By this token, Don's masterful way with you indicates that he feels older; therefore, in temperament (and to all intents and purposes) is the older or more mature personality. And by the terms of your appearance, you aren't older (constitutionally) than 28 at most; which suggests that your defensive anxiety about the calendar-age difference is a case of "borrowing trouble."

It seems to me the only thing you have to fear is fear itself, as President Roosevelt said of the economic crisis. To act on fear by dyeing your hair or otherwise trying to gaudily glamorize yourself would quickly spoil your looks, in the sense of forfeiting a natural simplicity which is the hallmark of youthful attractiveness.

Fear Is Agent Of Destruction

MOREOVER, the very fact of surrendering one's thoughts to fear, even if one simply feels fearful while taking no action, is physically aging. It cramps bodily functioning, causes anemic circulation, poor digestion, nervous tension, unrestful sleep, etc., which impoverishes health, dims the eye, shrivels the skin and generally divests one of glow and vitality, in looks and manner.

So for goodness sake stop worrying about the age-angle. As Don sensibly says, it doesn't matter. To be healthy and happy, to love and be loved, keeps one young in spirit and fair to behold as long as life lasts; and these good gifts are yours to command, and always will be beauty-assets, if you cast out fear and keep them in repair by cheerful cultivation.

For a final suggestion: Much as I respect Don's attitude in general, I disagree with his theory that his family is entitled to know your calendar-age if they ask. That statistic is nobody's business but yours, his and the insurance man's; and others who pry should get no satisfaction. So if the question is put and you'd be embarrassed to answer, you're entitled to hedge with bland good humor and Don should back you up. The jolly answer for either to give is, "Tut-tut; a woman who will tell her age will tell anything; and here is a woman of discretion."

Expecting a Baby?

Mother's Friend massaging preparation helps bring ease and comfort to expectant mothers.

MOTHER'S FRIEND, an exquisitely prepared emollient, is useful in all conditions where a bland, mild anodyne massage medium in skin lubrication is desired. One condition in which women for more than 70 years have used it is an application for massaging the body during pregnancy ... it helps keep the skin soft and pliable ... thus avoiding unnecessary discomfort due to dryness and tightness. It refreshes and tones the skin. An ideal massage application for the numb, tingling or burning sensations of the skin ... for the tired back muscles or cramp-like pains in the legs. Quickly absorbed. Delightful to use. Highly praised by users, many doctors and nurses. Millions of bottles sold. Just ask any druggist for Mother's Friend—the skin emollient and lubricant. Do try it.

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

We might have called this "Wise Guise," if we hadn't been afraid you'd tell us to take off the husks. Anyhow, it's about the fashions your favorite boys are wearing when they're not encased in those too tight jeans and those too bright shirts.

CORDUROYS IN COLOR—Since our last survey of male modes, corduroy jackets have moved up into first place for sartorial honors. Formerly, the boys were wearing them in light tan only. Now, they've branched out and you girls swoon for those collarless style corduroy jackets in maroon, green or gray. What are they trying to do, anyway—steal your thunder?

PLAY THE GAME—The newest cotton knit T shirts for boys are printed in a tick-tack-toe design, with only one frame already made out. The idea is to beat him at his own game and you can use your lipstick to make the "O's" and "X's." Guess he was jealous of your denim jacket with the checkerboard on the back and the checkers hanging on a key chain in front.

HI HABERDASHERY—Every boy wants one of those tie pins that look as if it were pierced through his tie. What's more, almost every boy has one—and every girl has her eye on it. Another bit of foolish frippery is the Liprint Handkerchief which he carefully points up over his breast pocket. Seems he has every girl he dates imprint her lipstick kiss on it. Then he wears it for show—not for blow.

Gem Session

What's going on in the Teen Jewelry Department, in addition to your pearls and your tag bracelets? Everybody knows—or should know—about those new petticoat-peeper pins. Everyone knows about fraternity and class pins, though not everybody is lucky enough to snare one. And everybody will soon know about these new gems for fems:

ENDEARING EARRINGS—Nowadays when he's going steady, he gifts his gal with a pair of Golden Earrings and everytime they hear Peggy Lee sing those lyrics, they heave a sentimental sigh. That's setting your mood to music.

TWINKLE, TWINKLE—Everybody's collecting good rhinestone jewelry. When you see how divine those Poor Man's Diamonds look with the Prom formals, you'll know why. Choker necklaces, bracelets and earrings are the favorites. You like to fasten rhinestone clips to your black suede ballerinas, too.

BORROWED BROOCHES—You're all borrowing mother's cameo brooch, and, if you're lucky, she has a large one with a diamond hanging like a pendant around the cameo lady's swanlike neck. You make sure it has a good safety catch; then you wear it to school with your Gibson blouse and swirling, long skirt. Next thing you know, they're describing your outfit in the school papers.

Class Conscious

We like to report your kindness to less fortunate teens in foreign countries—because it proves that you teens think with your hearts as well as your heads. Most of you have been making collections for "CARE" packages in your home rooms, but, as an extra activity, foreign language classes in lots of high schools are sending packages and letters to teens in the countries whose language they're studying. Of course, you must write the letters in the foreign language, which is good practice for you and good reading for the grateful teens who receive and answer them in their native tongues. It's lucky for you that Latin is now a dead language, because after you'd written that "all Gaul was divided into three parts," there would be nothing less to say.

TRIXIE TEEN SAYS—

You hear the commentators give their opinions about current events and international affairs on the radio (in between disc jockey shows, of course) and you hear your parents air their views around the dinner table. But have you bothered to form your own opinions on matters which may soon determine the future of the world? Or, do you say, "Oh, I'm just a teen-ager. I'm too young to make up my mind about things like this," and bury your brain in another movie magazine? You've got it all wrong. You're too old NOT to have convictions of your own—and too important to the future of the world not to have the courage to support them.

The betrothal was made known at a small family dinner held at the Tillsons' quarters on Yerba Buena Island, where Captain Tillson is in command of the receiving station.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Mary Washington College, branch of the University of Virginia, in Fredericksburg, Va., where she was elected May Queen in 1946. Little Comforts Give Air Of Luxury on a Budget

By Dorothy Draper

I HAD an invitation Saturday night in New York to go to a theater party. The thing that made the evening unusual and fun was a change in the regular routine. There was the spice of the unexpected in it. First, we met at a hotel and, to my delight, all the people except my host and hostess were complete strangers to me. I love the stimulation of new people. We had drinks and hot soup and canapes which seemed so much more sensible than trying to eat a hurried dinner to get to the theater on time. It spoils the dinner and the theater.

When we left the hotel, instead of having to struggle with a taxi, our host, who was a perfectionist, had taken the trouble to have two cars waiting to transport us to the theater where we saw a gay and amusing comedy.

Just as we were beginning to feel the first gnawing pangs of hunger we were whisked uptown again in the two cars to our hosts' house, which had recently been remodeled. A genial servant couple with big smiles on their faces beamed a warm welcome and helped us to a delicious buffet supper, so simple, yet so delectable. A big casserole of lobster Newburg, a green salad and a rich chocolate-cream roll and coffee.

AS I SAID, the house recently had been remodeled and, of course, was of great interest to me. The kitchen was in the front of the house, toward the street. In back, in what used to be the old kitchen, was the dining-sitting room, where we ate. It had been done over with a very modern approach. One original brick wall had been retained and painted white. Against this, a wall fountain sent up a fairy-like spray. The two walls joining it were painted brilliant emerald green, and the wall opposite the white brick was wallpapered in white with a green leaf design. This gave a sort of garden feeling to the room.

I wish I could describe the whole house. It was enchanting. Their air-conditioned bedroom (which I consider the height of luxury) was in the front of the house. A combination sitting room-dressing room got the benefit of the sun in the back of the house. The rooms had been cleverly planned. One whole storage wall in the dressing room would have made any woman happy. In the bathroom, the two big washstands with glass legs seemed a great convenience, and one that large families would do well to consider when building or remodeling a house.

What impressed me was the good use these people had made of their money. Some people, no matter how much money they have, never attain luxurious living.

Even if we live on a budget there are all kinds of things we can do in a small way to make life more comfortable. It is the little luxuries that can make us feel like a millionaire!

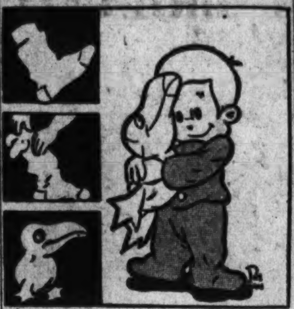
Dad's Old Sock Makes a Doll

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

For very young boys and girls a soft, cuddly kind of doll or animal is most satisfying. Nor do they care whether such a companion is very realistic.

One of the simplest ways of providing the beloved object is to take one of father's old (but clean) socks, stuff it with cotton or soft rags, sew on a few facial features in colored yarn, add a dress if you wish or some feet if it is to be a duck or a lion, and there you are.



You will want to be sure that the dye in the sock doesn't run. White socks are the best, perhaps. You may be surprised at what a fine plaything you can whip up in a few minutes. And if you have any doubts you can be sure your youngster won't.

Loudoun Woman's Club Hears Miss Exton Speak

Leesburg, Va., April 3.—Miss Elaine Exton, first chairman, Youth Conservation Department, D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Woman's Club of Loudoun held Saturday afternoon at the Leesburg Methodist Church. The program was arranged by the Youth Conservation Department of which Mrs. Ethel Adams is chairman.

Too smart for words—

At least we cannot find words adequate enough to describe the captivating nature of these short jacket, ballerina skirt suits. They are as new as this morning—as gay as a girl who knows she wears an exciting, eye-catching ensemble. The tailoring is close to exquisite. And there is a swank, musical lift to the swing of the skirt. Cambridge gray flannels and pastel gabardines.

Ask Anne

What Is Correct Length for Drapes?

THIS extra crusty chicken was prepared for frying by rolling it in well-seasoned flour first, then dipping it in a batter made of one beaten egg and one cupful of stale corn-bread crumbs. Smooth, delicious cream gravy is served with it

What is the correct length for swag drapes. We intend to use the drapes with Venetian blinds, minus (lace or net) curtains.

L. L. T., Jr.

If you plan to use just one piece of material for the drapes, arranging it in a swag at the top, this piece should be long enough to drop to the floor on both sides of the window. Sometimes, in a swag arrangement, straight drapes are used at the side and a separate piece is arranged in a swag across the top. With this arrangement, the ends of the swag would drop one third the length of the side drapes.

As a result of using soft coal, my furnace is coated with a tar-like substance on the inside. This causes smoke and gas to emit into the house when it becomes warm from the fire in the furnace, although hard coal is now being used. How can this substance be removed either while the furnace is in use, or after letting the fire go out? If this is not possible, is there any way to counteract this condition?

P. G. A.

There is a product sold at hardware stores which can be placed on the fire when the furnace is in operation and will help to burn the deposit off the inside of the furnace. Follow the directions which come with the product you buy. If this doesn't completely remove the deposit, it should be scraped off when the furnace is not in use by a furnace cleaner. Look under "Furnaces—Cleaned and Repaired" in the yellow pages of the telephone directory.

I have a genuine leather lounge chair, about a year old. It is a huge sort of a thing and the back is all tufted. I would like to know if there is anything that must be done to the chair in order to preserve it. The color is a deep red, and it is a lined-looking type of leather. I believe that that is called top grain.

To preserve your leather and prevent it from drying out, rub it with a mixture of two parts lanolin and three parts of neat's-foot oil. Mix in a double boiler over a low heat and apply for several hours on the leather while warm with a pad or soft brush. Allow to stand for several hours on the leather to be absorbed and polish. Repeat the treatment when the leather shows signs of drying.

I spilled some bleach on my car slipcovers. The cover is a royal blue and the bleach left a 3-inch circle taking the color completely out. It may also have affected the upholstery underneath the cover. Will you please advise me what to do with the slipcover to cover up the large spot; and also, if possible, what to do with the upholstery, which is gray in color?

S. R.

There really isn't much that can be done with the slipcover except sewing a patch of matching material over it. Since the color was completely removed, the fabric at that spot was no doubt weakened and will wear through quickly and a patch would also be necessary for this reason. Is it possible to cut a piece of the material to use as a patch from a tucked or underneath spot of the slipcover where it wouldn't be missed? This would be the least noticeable way to repair the damage. If you can't get a piece big enough to patch it from the slipcover, maybe you could replace that section of the slipcovers (for instance, the seats, if that is where the spot is) with a fabric of floral design to blend with the royal blue or a contrasting color.

The repair of the upholstery presents an even greater problem. Having that section of upholstery replaced (if it can be matched) by a professional upholsterer would be the only permanent solution.

I would like to know if some sort of white paint can be used to freshen the very soiled white top of my three section dining room table pad (top is a sort of canvas asbestos material; underneath is green felt). Is there a special paint for such a purpose?

L. S. W.

There is no special paint for this purpose, but this might freshen your table pad: Paint the top surface with flat white paint to cover the soil. When it is thoroughly dry, put on a coat of clear spar varnish or a varnish made from phenolic resins which are resistant to heat. These varnishes are called "heat resistant" and though they will not stand boiling temperatures, they would not be affected by warm dishes.

House Dress Should Be Sturdy, Attractive

Careful selection of the house dress is necessary, as this type of dress must be laundered so frequently. Be sure the buttons are not the sort that melt into squashy lumps when they encounter soap and water. Avoid large patch pockets that will catch on the various handles in the kitchen. If the skirt is pleated, be sure the pleats are ample and full, otherwise the constant kneeling one does in a house dress is apt to pull them out or tear the dress alongside the scanty pleat. Finally, the material must be sturdy, washable, and guaranteed against running of colors and shrinking.

Hard on the Furniture

When putting furniture away in storage or moving it to some distant point, do not fill the bureau and dresser drawers to the brim with heavy materials. If the piece of furniture is not well and heavily constructed this might cause the sides to swell and break down in the moving. Pack these drawers with light things if you must utilize space.

Badly Scratched Wood

If there are many bad scratches on the mahogany furniture it is wise to fill these scratches with a dark stain before applying wax or polish. Then when the wood is rubbed down it will cover all those marks.

Same Old Rent Conundrum

To Sign or Gamble Is Tenant's Choice

By Murrey Marder
Post Reporter

WHEN President Truman signed the 1948 Rent Control Act he reluctantly placed before millions of tenants outside the District of Columbia a now-familiar gamble:

Whether to agree to rent increases in return for long-term leases, or, where such leases were signed under the 1947 Act, to agree to extend them.

Landlords in Maryland, Virginia and the rest of the Nation also have the same choice they faced under the 1947 act—whether or not to seek the leases, which generally involve commitments on providing specified services and maintenance.

District residents who rent their quarters, while covered by a separate rent act, have more than a passing interest in this issue. Under District rent law there has been no similar choice on the "gamble" leases, but strong efforts are being made to have the new District rent law—the present one expires this April 30—follow the Federal pattern.

Key Factor

WHILE tenants and landlords alike under the new Federal law, like a horse player making a race selection, face similar odds and track conditions as under the past law, they now have information about a key factor—past performance.

Out of 15,700,000 units under Federal rent control across the Nation on June 30, 1947, about 1,700,000 leases embodying rent increases up to 15 per cent were signed under the 1497 act. These leases, which had to run through December 31, 1948, are now protected during the life of the 1948 act, which expires next March 31.

This generally gives present lease-holders a year's additional protection at current terms, without further action on their part. Tenants and landlords can "voluntarily" extend present 15 per cent increase leases, or, where leases were for less than a 15 per cent increase, landlords between now and next December 31 can seek to revise and extend these leases so that the full amount of increase would be 15 per cent.

There can be no "pyramiding" of 15 per cent increases, and new leases have to extend through December 31, 1949. Tenants who already hold leases, of course, can refuse to agree to change them in any way.

3 Other Methods

THE Federal rent law provides three other methods by which a landlord may gain a rent increase, in addition to offering leases.

The Nation (District, of course, is not included here) is divided into 600-odd rental areas, in each of which there is a rent advisory board which makes recommendations to the National Housing Expediter.

1. Boards can recommend complete decontrol of rents in their areas, but must show that controls are no longer necessary.
2. Boards can recommend a rise in the general rent level.
3. In hardship cases, substantiated by proof, landlords can gain individual rent increases through applying to the rent director in the area, who is an agent of the Housing Expediter.

What are the odds for and against approval of these three actions?

Between July 1, 1947, and February 29, 1948, a total of 244,979 individual petitions were granted landlords appealing for rent increases on the basis of hardship. There were an average of 1.2 housing units per landlord's petition.

Latest available figures show that the average increase authorized under these petitions was 13 to 14 per cent.

Eleven for 57

In the 600-odd rental advisory board areas there have been 51 board requests for the Housing Expediter to raise the general rent levels. Of these, 37 have been refused, 11 approved, and 4 are pending.

Where general rent levels have been raised, the range has been between 4 and 15 per cent, while requests for increases have been as high as 50 per cent.

And of these same 600-odd rental areas, 27 areas have been decontrolled—that is, entirely removed from coverage of the rent control law—while 27 requests for decontrol have been refused.

These statistics might be generally summarized thus, for the benefit of tenants:

Neither rent increases author-

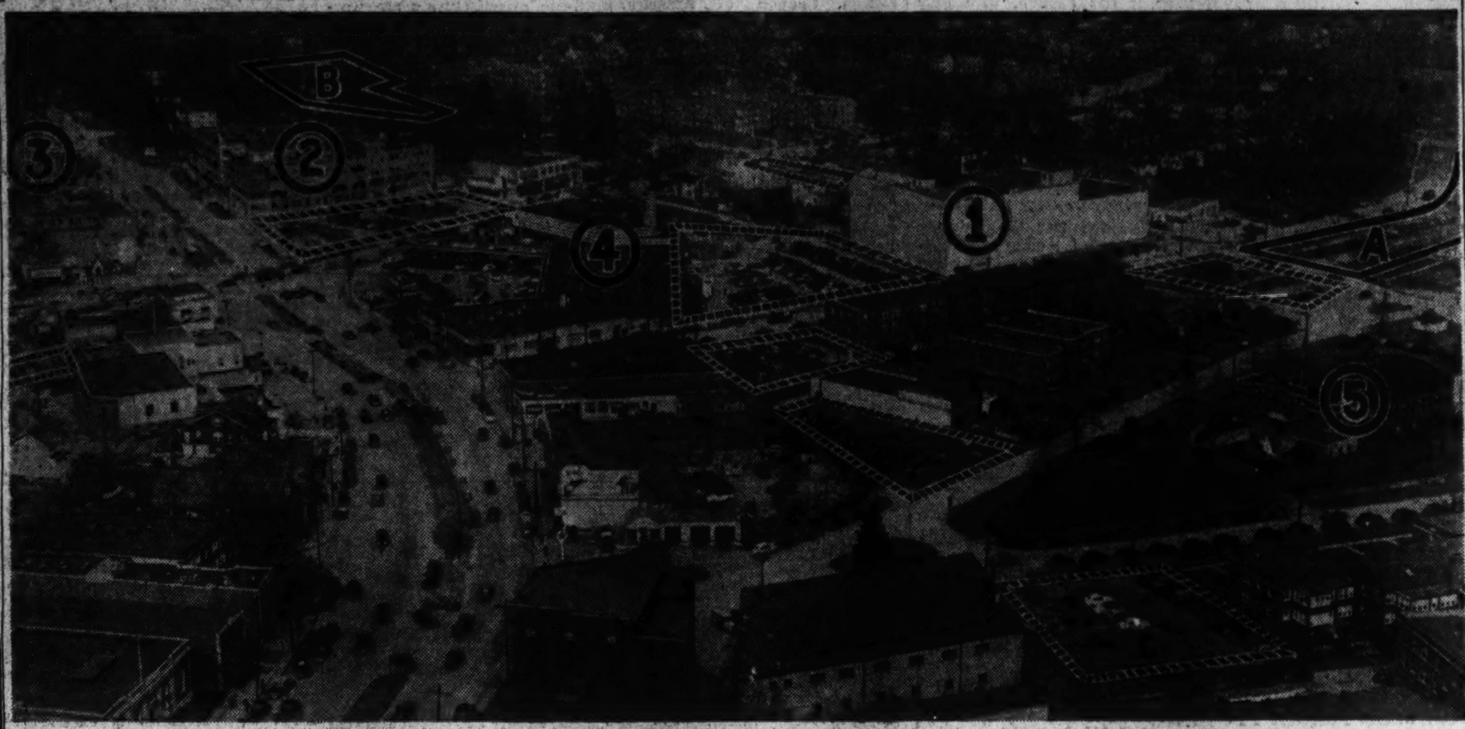
Park Your Car, Mister? Asks Silver Spring



By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post.
From Helicopter of Roto-Wing Air Services, Inc.

The northern edge of Silver Spring's business district is dotted with parking lots, public and private, and vacant lots where motorists park, indicated by broken lines. The lettered lots are part of the new $800,000 public parking program: A is at Ellsworth dr. and Fenton st.; B is between Cameron and Spring sts. The numbered lots are private ones, as follows: 1, Hecht Co.; 2, Johns Hopkins Applied Physics Laboratory; 3, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; 4, shopping center and movie theater at Georgia ave. and Colesville rd.

By Roger B. Farquhar
Post Reporter

A FORWARD-LOOKING parking lot program costing $800,000 is being financed by Silver Spring (Md.) merchants who are willing to pay heavily for the customers' convenience.

Eight parking lots to accommodate 3500 cars will be opened in July.

Anticipating the tremendous nearby Maryland expansion, Silver Spring merchants began promoting the program more than two years ago. They sold bonds which will be retired by a special levy on Silver Spring commercial properties.

Approximately $650,000 of the total has been spent and all of the eight strategically located lots have been acquired in whole or in part. Where owner resistance was encountered, condemnation proceedings were resorted to.

In the aerial photo accompanying this story, cars can be seen parked on more than a dozen lots in the community's center at Georgia ave. and Colesville rd. Only two of those lots are included in the new program. The others are privately owned and most of them are vacant lots being enjoyed by motorists pending building developments.

Largest of the proposed lots, just off Georgia ave. between Spring and Cameron sts., cost $100,000 and will accommodate 750 cars.

When the Hecht Co. opened its new store at Ellsworth dr. and Fenton st. last fall, a $100,000 lot across the street was rushed to completion to prevent traffic snarls.

A lot to accommodate 580 cars is just off Georgia ave. between Fenwick lane and Colesville rd. Others are: Bonifant st. between Ramsey and Dixon sts., 150 cars; Bonifant st. back of Suburban National Bank, 250 cars; between Silver Spring and Thayer aves. and running from Fenton st. to the alley in the rear of Georgia ave., 380 cars; between Sligo and Silver Spring aves. and Fenton st. and the same alley, 368 cars, and on Kennett st. between 13th st. and Newell rd., 350 cars.

Initially, the parking lots will be free, but county officials point out that the General Assembly authorized parking meters when it approved the $800,000 bond issue. At least two key county officials have hinted they are in favor of meters.

All of the lots, according to Andrew I. Kessinger, program chairman, will be surfaced with macadam and lighted.

Veterans' Housing Bogging, Legion Warns

THE American Legion warned yesterday that the Government housing program for veterans is verging on "total collapse" and called for immediate reinforcement of GI housing credit supports to keep the program alive.

Walter E. Alessandroni of Philadelphia, Pa., chairman of the organization's national housing committee, urged restoration of a Government secondary market for GI loans as "a mandatory step toward solution of veterans housing problems."

Terming the popular belief that veterans are getting most of the new housing built a "dangerous misconception," Alessandroni asserted:

"As a matter of fact, Government officials estimated that only 30 per cent of the new small homes completed last year went to veterans. GIs may be first in line for housing, but too often they're the last to be served."

Program "Paralyzed"

Alessandroni said that elimination by Congress last June of the RFC secondary market for GI loans made by the Veterans' Administration, has "virtually paralyzed" that program.

Pointing out that the number of GI loans has tumbled almost 40 per cent in the last five months, Alessandroni declared:

"Without a secondary market to assume the obligation for accumulated GI loans, many private financing institutions are unable or unwilling to handle GI financing. This means that at the very time when construction is booming, veterans are being boycotted from the housing market. The American Legion urges the restoration of an adequate Government secondary market which will enable veterans to make use of the housing rights guaranteed them by law."

The Legion housing chairman said there is "compelling justification" for this proposal in view of the secondary market now provided for FHA loans.

'Wide of the Mark'

Alessandroni described as "woefully wide of the mark" the proposal being made in Congress to dispose of the veterans' housing problem by extending operation of the FHA loan insurance program.

Alessandroni said general usage of FHA insurance has stimulated construction of homes priced beyond range of the average veteran's income, and for this reason the 30-day priority period granted veterans in purchasing FHA-insured homes is of little practical value.

"On the other hand," he said, "revitalization of the GI loan setup would encourage builders to produce more homes in a price range veterans can afford."

Alessandroni was in Washington to attend a House Veterans' Affairs Committee hearing on a proposed Veterans Homestead Act.

Major Merger

Basic U. S. Land Saving Policy Asked

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

AN AMBITIOUS measure to combine all soil conservation, reclamation, water and wildlife resources activities was offered last week by Chairman Clifford R. Hope (R., Kans.), of the House Agriculture Committee.

His bill, Hope says, would establish "a basic land policy for conservation and orderly use of our resources.

"The soil which produces our food, clothing and other essentials has been farmed carelessly and often exploited with little thought of future needs," Hope says. "We have ruined many millions of acres, and the United States is approaching a point where it will be unable to feed and clothe the people properly."

Hope's bill would set up a new executive agency in the Agriculture Department to be known as the Agricultural Resources Administration. The ARA would have at least three constituent agencies:

1. An Agricultural Land Service.
2. A Forest Service.
3. A Fish and Wildlife Service.

Some From Interior

THE bill would transfer and merge into the new service:

1. The present Soil Conservation Service.
2. All related activities of the Production and Marketing Administration and the Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils and Agricultural Engineering.
3. All functions of the Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Reclamation (now a part of Interior) concerned with use, administration and conservation of agricultural lands and waters. (It

Weed Killer Stealing DDT's Early Thunder

By Sam Dawson

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP).—That postwar wonder-child industry, pest control, hopes to double its growth again.

Only a year ago it was rated as a 100 million dollar business. This year it hopes to become a 200 million dollar affair.

Last year it was plagued with raw material shortages. This year it has enough, with only nicotine in short supply, as usual.

There should be enough insecticides, fungicides, rat poisons and weed killers for all reasonable demand this year, says the Agricultural Insecticide and Fungicide Association.

But there wouldn't be enough, if everyone did all the spraying recommended by State and Federal agencies.

Before the war the industry was concerned mostly with killing insects and fungi. At war's end DDT captured the public fancy. The latest "miracle" is 2-4D, the weed killer. It's going great guns.

So is the use of insect sprays on livestock. That not only adds pounds of beef and milk to contented steers and cows, respectively, but keeps down flies, so that farm belt towns are joining in the campaign as ardently as are the farmers.

Costlier Pests

THE INSECTICIDE industry is expecting big things this year from the cotton farmer. Government experts figure he loses about 10 per cent of his production to insects.

Traditionally, he doesn't do much until the boll weevil appears, but as labor and other costs go up he is more impressed with getting the most cotton possible from his acreage.

Robert C. Jackson, Washington representative of the National Cotton Council of America, points out, "It's one thing to have insects eat up 10-cent cotton; it is quite a different thing when they eat up 30-cent cotton."

Four comparatively new insecticides are aimed at other cotton foes as well as the weevil.

DDT prices recently took a slump. After the war it seemed as if everyone and his brother started making DDT. Stocks mounted, and then new insecticides were introduced. Distress selling in recent weeks led to sharp price cuts.

The new insecticides are said to be reasonably priced.

Indiscriminate Stuff

WEED killers are all the rage this year. Farmers are taking to them as they did at first to DDT—and as they rarely do to new-fangled things.

Some manufacturers are worried lest farmers' overzealous use of 2-4D may lead to kickbacks, as in the case of the first use of DDT.

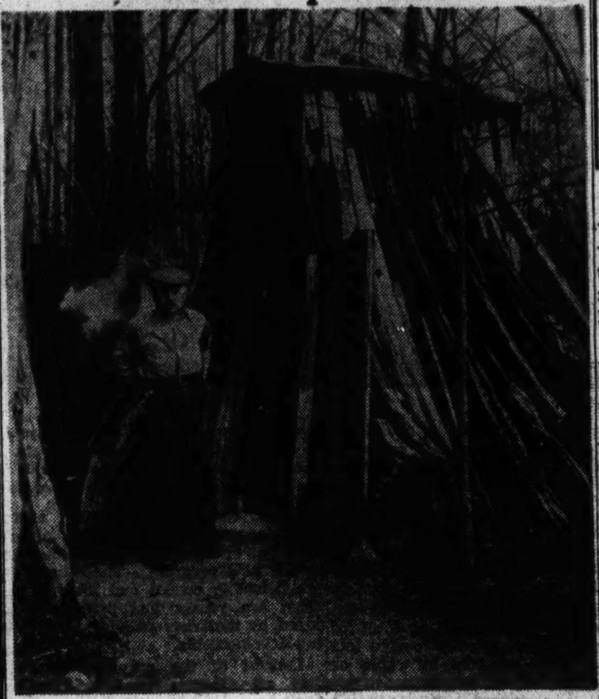
There is still another danger. To 2-4D, any plant with a broad leaf is a weed. For example, the weed killer works fine on a rice paddy, but if wind carries any of the dust over to an adjoining cotton field—well, cotton has a broad leaf.

Dealers insist this can be prevented by proper application.

Dr. C. J. Willard, president of the North Central Weed Control Conference, thinks that proper use of weed killers this year would save 35 million bushels of spring wheat and 50 million bushels of hard red winter wheat in sections unusually plagued by weeds due to last fall's dry weather; 10 million bushels of barley and 40 million bushels of corn; and would provide from 5 to 40 per cent more livestock carrying capacity on pasture lands.

Dr. N. E. Van Stone of the Sherwin-Williams Co., which makes weed killer, says that last year western Canada treated 500,000 acres and estimated the increase in yield as one and a half million bushels of wheat. This year Canada plans to treat seven million acres.

You Can't Stump a Westerner



Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

You'd hardly expect anything like this in the great Pacific Northwest, where they threw up the vast city of Hanford in a couple of afternoons, but here's proof of a housing shortage in Sedro Woolley, Wash. Peter Bilecki, a 54-year-old former cook, carved himself a habitation out of the remains of a cedar, and has lived in it for 22 months, with a cat as roommate. This solution is not recommended for Washington, D. C., where the vegetation is less commodious

Work on City Planning

TO DEVELOP an interest in city planning among young people, the Washington Board of Trade has launched a junior community improvement project, with students in the elementary, junior and senior high schools of the Washington metropolitan area—including parochial and private schools—invited to participate.

The project, which is now under way, will climax with a showing of finished exhibits in the National Guard Armory on June 3, 4, and 5.

Chairman for the project is Rudolph Kauffman 2d, assisted by Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, George Bissett, William Coyle, Edmund Purves and George R. Titus.

The Rev. C. A. Boehmer and Miss Margaret Pepper, administrative assistant to Dr. Hobart M. Corning, D. C. schools superintendent, are coordinating activities of the parochial and District schools.

The D. C. Board of Education has indorsed the plan, which is open to all schools in the District, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md., Fairfax and Arlington Counties, and Alexandria. Chambers of Commerce in these areas have been asked to support the project.

Projects will be submitted either by classes, groups of classes, clubs, or entire schools. There is no limit to the number of exhibits which may be entered.

Projects completed by June 1 will be placed on display at the Armory. Awards of excellent, good and honorable mention will be distributed in four groups: elementary schools, grades 1, 2, 3; grades 4, 5, 6; junior high schools; senior high schools.

Entries may be models, maps, drawings, diagrams or photographs. A short explanation of the problem and its suggested solution will accompany each exhibit.

Purpose of the program is to emphasize to school children the importance of city planning and through them to influence parents.

Midtown Building

42d and 5th Area Seeing Alterations

By Jean Meegan

Associated Press Newsfeature Writer

NEW YORK.—Changes are being made in the 17 blocks of midtown Manhattan that constitute the most highly publicized neighborhood in the world.

Midtown, from 42d st. to 59th, contains the stately tableaux of 5th ave., the glittering excesses of cafe society, the bankruptcy and want of the tenements, the gay democracy of Times Square.

At 5th ave. and 51st st., St. Patrick's Cathedral has had a two-million-dollar face lifting, which kept that Gothic mass of blackened granite and marble in a cocoon of steel scaffolding for two years. The cathedral's neighbor on the north, the Grand Central Art Gallery, has moved to 57th st. Her old corner was blasted away and is replaced by a 12-story, white brick department store (Best's), on the march from the older shopping district of the 30s.

Cornelius Vanderbilt's multimillion dollar mansion, for half a century a red stone landmark at 51st and 5th, has been razed to make way for a publishing house (Crowell-Collier). The avenue remains, however, a promenade of the most stylish women in the world.

Fifth ave. separates the east and west sides of Manhattan. On the east side the rents are mostly high, the residents rich, the clubs, shops, restaurants and movies small and exclusive.

Park ave. has lost the ancient Murray Hill Hotel at 41st st. and added a modernistic office building at 57th. The other important change in that wealthy street is reaction to high rents. The ranch-like apartments of 18 and 20 rooms are being converted to 5 and 6-room units.

By far the most important change in midtown in many years is expected on the East Side. That is the United Nations home, not in the high life quarter but on a waterfront plot bounded by 1st ave., 42d and 48th sts. and Franklin D. Roosevelt dr. It will replace a pocket of meat packing plants, machine shops, warehouses and tenements.

West of 5th ave. the two showiest changes are the new name for 6th ave., now "the Avenue of the Americas," and the addition of a new building to the colony of 14 in Rockefeller Center. Standard Oil has supplied the fifteenth and possibly final skyscraper.

Rooms Need 'Color Logic' Plan

Tribulations of decorating a home can be minimized to a great extent by selecting one fabric for your color scheme.

"Most rooms need more color logic, less color 'scheming,' according to an article in the April issue of House Beautiful magazine." "Find your favorite hues in one patterned fabric, and you have your whole color plan. It can give you, logically and harmoniously, the tone of your walls, rugs and furnishings.

"When you decorate a room, you're an artist with clean canvas and full palette. The color possibilities are infinite; so are the risks."

By studying the work of professional decorators, the home decorator learns the trick of turning out a tonal triumph instead of a daub, according to the article.

"You'll appreciate this logic as a headache-saver, too, if you've ever planned color the other way round, first seeking solid colors you hoped would go together, then trying to find them all in one happy pattern.

"It's not hard these days to find solid-color fabrics that pick up the tones of a variegated print of stripe because so many fabric manufacturers are designing patterns and plains so that they may be used together."

Plant Roots Also 'Inhale' Fresh Air

Importance of fresh air to garden plant roots has been stressed by recent scientific studies, which have proved that in porous soil the air down to a depth of eight inches is completely changed once every hour.

Both the leaves and roots of land plants breathe. When the soil in which they grow is flooded, air is excluded, and when this condition lasts too long the plant can drown, as sure as, though more slowly than, an animal which sinks under water.

As water sinks down and drains off, air reenters the porous soil, provided the surface of the soil allows free passage. But when the surface is compacted, as a result of wetting, baking in the sun or other causes, circulation of the air is checked, and the plants will suffer.

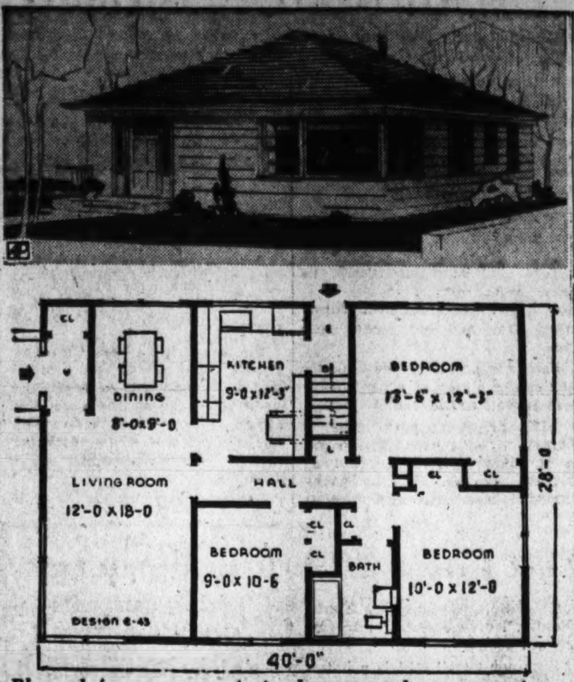
Civilization Purpose

To loosen a compact or crusted surface and restore the free exchange of air is a chief purpose of cultivation. The destruction of weeds is another. The former theory that cultivation is necessary to create a "dust mulch" on the soil to check evaporation of soil water is no longer widely held.

But the amateur gardener, who has observed that plants grow better after the surface soil has been stirred, and the crust broken, should keep on doing this in much the same way.

Experiments have definitely disposed of the old-time theory that the deeper soil is cultivated the better, however. It seems to be established that an inch, or two inches at the most, is as deep as the hoe should go down. Stirring any deeper, particularly close to plants, may disturb the roots of growing plants and do more harm than good.

Mulches over the soil will serve the same purpose as cultivation, by preventing crust formation, and keeping fresh air in the soil.



Planned for economy of simple rectangular construction, this house of 1120 square feet gets a maximum amount of floor space with a minimum of foundation. It was designed by the Small House Planning Bureau of St. Cloud, Minn., as Plan C-43. With full basement, the house contains 21,280 cubic feet. If built on the south side of a street the kitchen and dining space would get the morning sun. Reversal of plan would produce the same result on the north side of a street. The house can be built of frame construction with shingle or clapboard siding, or of concrete or masonry. Three bedrooms and open plan living-dining area afford a lot of livability

Life Insurors Up Holdings In Real Estate

LIFE INSURANCE companies of the United States last year sold 79 million dollars of real estate, but their purchases of 205 million dollars resulted in an increase in total real estate holdings to 838 million dollars at year-end, the Institute of Life Insurance reports.

Holdings of real estate other than farms, home office properties and properties held for investment, were reduced during 1947 to 110 million dollars, the lowest point since 1929, and 38 million dollars of these were under contract of sale. This left only 72 million dollars of these city properties held outright at year-end.

The life companies' holdings of farm properties, of which more than a billion dollars worth had been foreclosed during the prewar depression, were reduced to 77 million dollars at year-end and all but 14 million dollars of these were under contract of sale.

"The large sales of real-estate holdings during the past few years are evidence of the major job done by the life companies in rehabilitating the properties they found it necessary to foreclose and putting them back into full community use," the Institute said. "In the past three years these companies sold more than 500 million dollars of real estate. Since 1929, their real estate sales have approximated two billion dollars. Hundreds of thousands of farms, city homes and business properties were put back into condition and into effective use by the life insurance companies."

This was the first year that total real estate holdings of the life companies had increased since 1937, the upturn being due to increased purchases of real estate

Daylight Time Still Lacks Majority

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP).—President Truman's recent suggestion that daylight saving in the United States be on an all-or-nothing basis will fall far short of fulfillment this year.

A survey of the 49 States indicated today that "summer time" has won some converts since last year. More than 60 million of the Nation's 145 million people will follow daylight saving in 1948.

But in general, the pattern is the same as in 1947.

The populous northeastern section of the country will observe the advanced time almost 100 per cent. There will be only scattered observance in most other areas. Rural sections will continue to shun it.

Mr. Truman told a news conference last week he considered daylight saving a lot of hooey unless it was followed on a national scale.

That Lost Sleep

MOST communities observing the new time will start getting their extra hour of evening recreation on Sunday, April 25, this year. Clocks will be moved ahead an hour at 2 a. m. that day.

The lost hour of sleep will be regained five months later, on September 26.

California went on a daylight-saving basis on March 14 as a power-conservation measure induced by severe drought. This will continue until next January unless the Governor decides the emergency has ended before then.

All but one county in Nevada moved their clocks ahead with California and the lone holdout plans to follow suit this Sunday.

The principal sections adopting daylight-saving time in 1948 after failing to observe it last year are California, Nevada, Detroit and other Michigan cities and Cleveland, along with some other northern Ohio cities.

Present Prospects

PROSPECTS at present for daylight saving by States are:

All or most communities to observe it—Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Illinois, California and Nevada.

Some communities to observe it—Tennessee, West Virginia, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio, Indiana, Virginia and possibly Florida.

None—Arizona, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Utah, Coloroda, Wyoming, New Mexico, Montana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota and Wisconsin.

"Summer time" still is a hot issue in some places. Oregon considered establishing it unofficially this year to conform with California, but farmer opposition was too strong.

In Kentucky, the Governor vetoed a bill which would have removed the statutory ban on daylight saving.

The Miami area in Florida plans a vote on the question in May. New Orleans is considering a similar referendum.

The District of Columbia used the advanced time in 1947 and a bill calling for a repeat performance has been introduced. It was blocked temporarily when first called up.

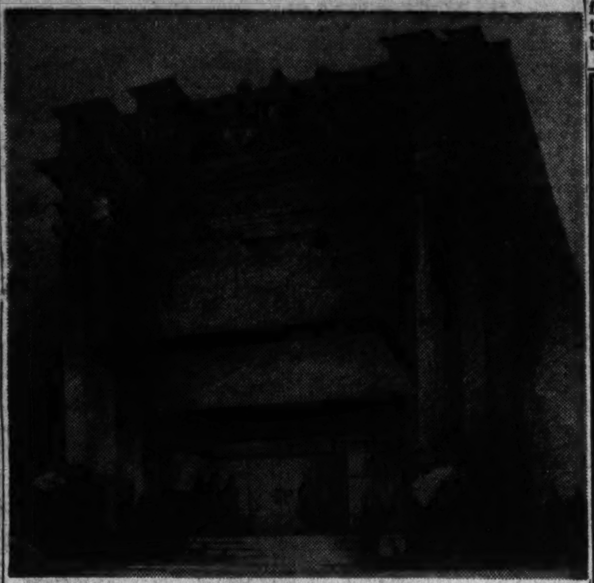
New Theater, the Playhouse, Will Open Here This Month



Architect's drawing of the Playhouse, new theater to open here this month

THE Playhouse, "sister" theater to the popular Little, is scheduled to open late this month at its location on 15th st. nw. near H. The new house will be operated by the same combine which manages the Little, Mrs. Louise Noonan Miller and Ilya Lopert of Lopert Films, Inc., New York.

Formerly a bank, later a restaurant, the building in which the new theater is situated has been remodeled into a fashionable, up to date motion picture house. Floors of both orchestra and mezzanine are saucer-shaped to afford good vision from all seats. The mezzanine stands free of the side walls of the original building and is of double-cantilevered, reinforced concrete construction. Simon B. Zelnik was the architect and Morris Cladny general contractor.

Seats in the Playhouse are spaced three feet apart, back to back, and a new retractable model allows 100 per cent more passage space than conventional seating.

Projection and sound equipment, the manager says, are of the finest obtainable and the theater will be air-conditioned throughout.

Exact opening date has not been announced.

Early Spring Is Best Time

Rock Gardens Require Periodic Face Liftings

By Alfred Putz

EVEN the most carefully planned rock garden will need a good face lifting from time to time because the habits of the plant material vary. Some species will last for many years without growing out of bounds. Others, less durable, give a good display for several years but finally make their exit despite special care bestowed on them. Still others are aggressors of no mean ability, which creep and spread all over, interfering with less vigorous beauties. Some of these have their value but must be kept strictly within definite limits. Fortunately, they are mostly shallow rooters, easily pulled up when the soil is wet.

Early spring, when the bulbous plants can be easily located by their flowers or foliage, is by far the best time to give the rock garden a thorough overhauling. Discard all plants which have proved troublesome or did not contribute their share of beauty. Neither kind deserves consideration, and the garden is better off without them.

The selection of the new material is likely to be more critical than when the rockery was first established, in view of the experience that has been gained. Personal preference will influence the choice even more than the adaptability of plants to specific conditions, so no two gardeners will see eye to eye on any planting list.

Yet there are certain plants most gardeners consider indispensable. One is alyssum saxatile compactum, with its bright yellow cushions during May and June. It likes a sandy soil with good drainage. Arabis or rockcress is a good white-flowered companion plant for identical conditions. Trim both back after flowering to keep them bushy.

Aethionema grandiflorum, the Persian stonecress, is a handsome rock garden plant about a foot high, with lovely rose flowers from May to early July. Coridifolium or Lebanon stonecress is good, too, although the flowers are smaller and more of a lilac tint. They prefer the same conditions as the plants listed above.

Aubrietia or purple rockcress is best where summers are not too hot. It prefers semi-shade and moderate soil moisture, easily provided by planting in a low spot with a large stone to the south of it. Although making a rather large circular cushion, saponaria ocymoides, one of the soapworts, does not become troublesome because the branches arising from the crown do not take root. Its bright pink flowers are a delight in May and June.

For an intimate touch, establish a little colony of the cobweb houseleek, sempervivum arachnoideum, in some limy crevice, high up where it has full sun and no competition. Where summers are not too hot, primula will survive for years if given a low spot rich in humus. It will add color generously during the spring.

A similar condition is wanted by the white cupflower, nierembergia rivularis, which should be tucked away in a sheltered spot to survive the winter. The lavender-flowered mazus reptans is a real treasure for low, moist pockets. Hem it in well with stones if you want to keep it from spreading.

There are also several good lychnis such as arkwrighti and haageana; and among the closely related Silene, the moss champion (silene schafta) with its showy rose or purple blooms is the choice of most gardeners. You also will like iberis snowflake which is much better than the common form of hardy candytuft.

Others deserving careful consideration are aster alpinus, campanula carpatica, various dianthus, geum, heuchera, linum, enothera missouriensis, certain species of veronica and the lovely spring-flowering phlox represented by the species subulata, amoena, sylvestris and divaricata.

D. C. and Va. Vets Get Aid Against Gyps

THREE HUNDRED appraisers throughout Virginia and the District will help the GI home-buyer get what he bargains for, the Veterans' Administration office at Richmond announced last week.

VA officials said the program is an answer to veterans' gripes that they have been gypped on houses financed through GI loans.

Simeon Hyde, loan guaranty officer of the Richmond office, said "we hope to guarantee that Government funds will not go into fantastic projects. We still cannot guarantee that the veteran always will be completely satisfied."

Builders will have to show "certificates of reasonable value" when they turn over the property to the veteran, Hyde said. Three inspections will be made at these stages of construction:

1. When foundation excavations are complete, footing forms are ready for pouring concrete and subsurface installations are "roughed in."

2. Before backfilling of excavations and with all structural members exposed, and while heating, plumbing and electrical installations are "roughed in" and visible.

3. When the structure is ready for occupancy.

Bath Towels Sub for Bathroom Curtains

Curtains are so expensive these days that some ingenious housewives solve the problem of curtains for bathrooms by using large colorful Turkish towels for a pair of tie-back curtains. They cut off one border to hem and use as tie-backs and then use that end for the top through which the rod travels. One can always match the colors in any bathroom in towels and think how easily they can be laundered.

Washington Estates

Hundreds of homeseekers have visited this new development during construction. They were charmed by its general plan of winding, tree-shaded streets and the individuality and varied design of the homes.

Washington Estates is attractive, because of its convenience to elementary and high schools, stores, churches and rapid bus transportation. This 300-acre planned community, in District Heights, Maryland, is only 20 minutes to downtown Washington.

All improvements have been installed at Washington Estates: sewers, water, gas, electricity and 50 and 60 foot paved streets. A complete community center is contemplated, to provide shops, theaters and public play areas.

Each Washington Estates home is situated on an attractive, naturally wooded lot. Each has a different exterior design; each is expandable. There are two bedrooms and bath on the first floor and a second floor designed to accommodate two bedrooms and bath with little additional finishing work.

Other features which have attracted so many hundreds to Washington Estates are a log-burning fireplace in the living room, Burrows custom-made unit kitchen, full size gas range, inlaid linoleum, and a large tile bath with shower.

Washington Estates homes include such basic features as Bryant gas heat, large basement, rock wool insulation, weatherstripping, copper pipe and spouting, plastered walls and ceiling, hardwood floors, brass hardware, and modern steel casement windows with copper screens.

75 of these homes are ready for occupancy with settlement.

Medicine for the Children

A game usually must be played when a dose of unpleasant medicine is administered to the young child. The most satisfactory one in our family is for mother to turn her back on the procedure and count slowly from 1 to 10. Of course, she is simply amazed to find the dose down in less than five.

4-H Clubbers Elect 'Tail-Twister' Pete

By Fred Sailor Harvey

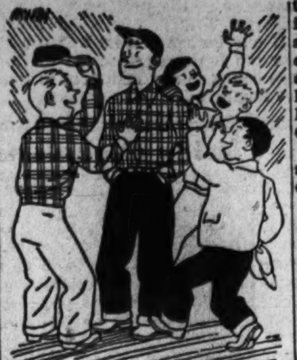
FIFTEEN BOYS sat in the first two rows of the big room of the Town Hall. Most wore blue overall pants with brass rivets, and bright checked wool shirts or sweaters. An older boy sat a little apart, looking a little embarrassed. At the back sat several parents, talking quietly.

The man in charge of the meeting said: "Boys, we've got three new members here today and I'm particularly glad that one of them is Pete because he is older. We need some older boys. Pete has been farming with his dad and taking care of cattle for quite a few years so he can be a lot of help to you younger men."

The boys all turned and looked at Pete. Two hissed through their teeth, "Hi, Pete," anxious to be recognized by one so impressively old. The big fellow squirmed but held his ground. The man started talking again and the boys turned around.

"First, I want to be sure the new boys understand the two main jobs we're working on this year—raising steers and soil conservation. Every boy has to have a special job of his own. Let's check over the reports on the steers and see how they're getting along. Philip, that was a mighty nice white-face Hereford your dad bought for you. How much weight did you put on him last month?

Philip stood up and answered proudly, "Forty-five pounds."



A suppressed giggle came from the second row. Philip's face flushed. "Aw, they're laughin' because they said I measured him around the belly instead of the chest, but I didn't." Loud laughter came from both rows.

"Well, I hope not, Philip," said the man, "because you're only fooling yourself if you don't measure him at the same place around the heart girth each time. Now how much did your feed cost last month?"

The boy looked down at the record card in his hand. "Well, the ground corn, protein supplement and hay added up to $10.50. But it won't be that much next month because I told dad he was charging too much for the corn. He figures it at market price, but it's all old, soft corn that didn't ripen on account of the early frost and he could not sell it anywhere else if he tried. So I told him I had to have a better price and he said O. K."

A man at the back of the room shifted uncomfortably while everyone looked at him, laughing.

Jimmy's steer had gained only 15 pounds. He said he thought it was because of lice. The boys beside him said "Oh" and pulled away from him, scratching their heads and grinning. Jimmy said old motor oil and DDT had fixed things up and the steer was gaining better now.

The next boy reported trouble teaching his steer to lead on a rope and the leader turned to Pete.

"What do you do with your cattle in a case like that, Pete?"

"Well, I get someone else to hold the rope, then I stand off at one side so he can't kick and I twist his tail a little. That starts him off—fast."

The boys liked the tail-twisting idea. They grabbed in the air and twisted imaginary tails. The leader calmed their enthusiasm for the method then turned to LeRoy.

"Now, LeRoy, you signed up for soil conservation. There's a long list of jobs you can choose from. Have you picked out one?"

LeRoy stood up straight and proud. He said, "Sure, I'm going to plant trees. My granddad knows all about trees and he said he'd help me."

The leader put on a false, puzzled expression and asked:

"Trees? What have trees to do with soil conservation, LeRoy?"

The boy was indignant, "Well, they're about the most important thing of all. On the steep places if you don't have trees, pretty soon the dirt all washes off and there's nothing but rocks. And the leaves and dead limbs off the trees are what makes the best black dirt. They keep water from running away so fast too, so the springs don't dry up in the summer."

No Partisan Politics

THE leader accepted the explanation quite seriously and told LeRoy he should make a good tree man. Then he said, "Now, we've got to have election of officers for the new year."

The boys liked making nominations and there seemed to be a definite routine of courtesy about it. When John nominated Jim, Jim promptly turned around and nominated John. But when it came to voting they were more careful. No candidate for high political office was ever looked over with more frankly appraising eyes. The candidates tried to appear unconcerned but it was evident they were conscious that their merits and demerits were being passed in review. They squirmed and wrote longer than necessary on their own ballots.

Nominations for president came last. Pete, the older boy, was first nominated. He promptly returned the favor but it was clear who had the election. The boys could hardly wait for the ballots to be passed out. They wet their pencils on their tongues, took a last careful admiring look at Pete and started writing.

The leader helped the secretary count the ballots. He said, "Well boys, there's only one vote against your choice and I expect that one was written by Pete. So, beginning with the next meeting of the 4-H Club we'll have a new president and Pete will be it."

The boys stamped and shouted as they started for the door and Pete himself looked a little pleased.

Rep. Hope Asks Basic Land Saving Policy

would not touch functions in these bureaus dealing with other than agricultural resources.)

4. The Fish and Wildlife Service, now a part of Interior, would be returned outright to Agriculture. (This was formerly the Agriculture Bureau of Biological Survey.)

Exempt are the Office of Indian Affairs and the National Park Service, both left with Interior, and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

3 Acres Per Capita

"UNDER our present conservation program," Hope pointed out, "we are losing about 500,000 acres of crop land each year through erosion, silting, improper land uses and other preventable causes."

About three acres of cropland are needed to provide each person with food, clothing and shelter at present standards, Hope said.

"With our population increasing about two million a year, an additional six million acres of producing land are needed annually

"Conservation cannot be accomplished piecemeal by many separate agencies devoting themselves independently to their own little activity. Unification is the only way."

Aid to Farmers

THE bill would require the Agriculture Secretary to make a "complete conservation inventory of the Nation's agriculture lands." It would empower the ARA to provide technical assistance to State agencies, soil conservation districts, local farm groups and individual farmers.

Assistance to farmers would include cash payments, conservation materials, planting stock and seed, equipment and similar measures.

Conservation payments would continue, with emphasis on long-term programs such as terracing, drainage and irrigation and water diversion. Secondary emphasis is placed on such temporary practices such as liming, fertilizing and crop rotation.

The bill would continue the county AAA committees and also authorize county "Agricultural Program Committees."

The latter would include representatives of each rural electrification cooperative, soil conservation district, AAA county committee, Agricultural Extension Service and farm loan group in the county. State and Federal employes would be ineligible for membership.

Hearings on the bill will start soon, Hope promised.

Realty Round-Up

THE Capitolians, a deep-breathing male quartet, will handle the entertainment chores when the Montgomery County Real Estate Board meets Friday at Indian Spring Country Club, R. P. Ripley, president, announces. The board had an inside track to the Capitolians, since Walter Bogley, president of the Bank of Bethesda, is a member of the board and sings bass with the quartet on the side. Or maybe he's president of the bank on the side. Anyway, he doubles in bass with the Capitolians, you might say. Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will be the featured speaker.

TWO-DAY CLINIC on real estate sales and service will be held Friday and Saturday at the Hotel Jefferson, Richmond, Va. Howard J. Wisehaupt, business analyst and sales counselor, will conduct a series of sales training programs in connection with the clinic, which is being held in cooperation with the Virginia Real Estate Commission. Robert J. Lancraft of Arlington is conference director. Some people who are scheduled to take part in the clinic are: Herbert U. Nelson (see above), Robert L. Rush, chairman, Virginia Real Estate Commission; Calvin K. Snyder, executive secretary, realtors' Washington committee, and Frank G. Morrison, vice president, First Federal Savings and Loan Association, Washington.

ANNUAL SPRING dinner of the Alexandria-Arlington-Fairfax Real Estate Board will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the dining room at National Airport. There will be entertainment, dancing, and an after-dinner man. The latter will be James E. Gheen, New York public relations counselor, who is reported to be very quick with a joke. This year's dinner will honor the "graduating class" of 100 brokers and salesmen who took part in the second fall and winter institute conducted by the board under chairmanship of Ashton C. Jones, jr.

ANOTHER annual dinner: Potomac Rose Society's yearly feast will be held a week from Thursday (April 15) at All Souls' Unitarian Church, 15th and Harvard sts. nw. The time is 6:45 p.m. (sharp, it says here) and tickets are $1.75 each. Reservations must be in the hands of the chairman before April 12. Chairman is A. E. West, 1309 Emerson st. nw., Washington.

Comes Spring And With It The Termites

COMES spring and robins appear in the North, azaleas bloom in the South and termites swarm all over the country.

Frequently confused with "flying ants," some of the termites in each colony—the scientists call them alates or winged reproductives—feel the universal urge to go out and start housekeeping on their own. So out they come from their nests deep in the ground, try out their wings in a brief flight (sometimes no more than a few yards), choose mates and set off to head a family which will number thousands.

Having these winged termites in or around the house is anoying, but in a way they are doing the owners a good turn, because their presence is a warning that there is an established termite colony in the vicinity, which may be eating away at the understructure of the house. The swarmers themselves do not eat wood; their only function is reproduction, thus perpetuating the life of the colony. It's the thousands of workers they leave behind in the nests that do the dirty work.

Of course, one doesn't always see swarmer termites, even though the property may be infested. Frequently termites swarm beneath the house, and never get out into the open. They remain in sight only a short time.

Sometimes one won't see the termites themselves, but will see thousands of tiny wings in the basement. Swarmer termites pry off their wings as soon as they alight from their flight.

It's very easy to get rid of the winged termites just by sweeping them up with a broom. But getting rid of the army of wood-eating termites they leave behind is another matter. The worker termites live in their nests deep in the ground and come up to attack the wood in the house. They work inside the wood only and rarely come through the surface. Thus, the use of sprays, powders, fumigation and other usual methods for insect pests doesn't affect them.

The only effective and lasting way to protect a house from termites is to block off all approaches to it, in effect insulating the house from the ground, where the termites live. The only practical way of doing this in the case of an existing building is by chemical means. This is a rather involved and somewhat costly process, which calls for trained workmen and expensive equipment.

If swarmer termites show up in or near your home, the best bet is to call a reliable termite control concern at once to have a complete check made of the property. Such inspections may save lots of money by preventing expensive damage, if the home is infested. If possible, save a few specimens of the winged termites for the inspector and show him the area from which they came.

Something for the Owner

Book of Home Tips Would Cheer Pop

By Conrad P. Harness

IF the building industry has a "Suggestions Wanted" box, here's one we offer free:

Buy a new automatic washer and the dealer usually sends out a demonstrator to show the do's and don'ts. In any case, the buyer gets a book of operating instructions.

Buy a puppy from any kennel and you'll receive suggestions on care and feeding. Invest in a new car and you're flooded with maintenance instructions.

But, buy a new house and it's a 100-to-1 bet the builder washes his hands of you the minute the mortgage company has you on its rolls!

Say you've mortgaged your life for the next 20 years in exchange for a five-room bungalow. What do you know about a new house? Nothing. You may have lived in apartments for the last 14 years. You know the mortgage payment is due on the first of each month, that's all.

A "How, When and Why-To-Do-It" Book

THE buying public awaits the day each builder gives his customers a booklet entitled: "Your House—Its Care and Upkeep."

This gold mine of information would tell something of the materials used in the house, construction methods, but, best of all, it would show readers how to live in a house without wanting to burn the darn thing down.

What about that dead air space between the studs? Is it going to act as an insulation barrier and keep out the heat this summer and the cold next winter? Or do you need insulation? And if so what kind and what would be a fair price to pay, according to the size of the house?

Should the owner get unduly worried the first time his toilet overflows? Does it mean the plumbing contractor has got his pipes mixed up, or is it probably one of baby's diapers down the hatch? The booklet would have the answer in black and white: "Cut off water to toilet by turning shut-off valve at pipe leading into bowl. That will stop overflow immediately. Try pump action with "plumber's helper." That should flush out obstruction. Turn water back on. If trouble still persists, call plumber.

And think how beneficial a paragraph or two would be giving instructions on care of the hardwood flooring and asphalt tile in the kitchen.

And what happens if the pressure goes zooming down on the gas heating pump and icicles begin forming on the baby's crib? Does the owner get the builder out of bed at 2 a. m. or does he open his little book and learn: "Open shut-off valve in accessory water tank above gas furnace and let water flow into radiator system until pressure guage on furnace reads 15."

Cost Index On Building Up 3 Points

THE Austin index of industrial building costs advanced 3 points to 168 during the first quarter of 1948.

George A. Bryant, president of the Austin Co., engineers and builders, said the index, which is computed by applying base rates and prices in representative localities to a typical factory structure, reflects only a part of the actual increase.

"Competition among firms trying to cover their needs for basic materials and labor required to complete construction jobs has made it difficult to figure the cost of finishing any project by the mere extension of base figures," he said.

"Much serious thought that the softening of general commodity prices might set the stage for reduction of building costs seems to have been dissipated by events of the past six weeks. The reason: material and labor increases recently announced not only affect all types of industrial construction, but tell only part of the story. The additional costs entailed in getting materials or equipment when you need them, for instance, and then in getting the work finished, boost the percentage of increase in almost every instance."

While the midwinter break in prices does not seem to have affected buildings costs, it has brought many long-deferred projects "out of the moth balls," according to Bryant.

Last month contract awards by a number of ultraconservative firms for construction of facilities on which engineering has long been completed, are interpreted by Bryant as significant evidence of the changed attitude toward the long-term outlook for building prices.

"More and more executives in manufacturing and service industries are reaching the conclusion that further delays in construction needed to step up their efficiency, improve their service, or enable them to move in on new markets, may actually place them in serious jeopardy," he added.

Tenant Still Has Same Choice: Sign Up or Gamble

ised on landlords' appeals, nor general rises in rent levels, according to past action, are likely to be above 15 per cent—the top figure allowed in long-term leases.

And tenants cannot be evicted for refusing to sign a lease during the life of the law.

But there is still the possibility that a rent area may be decontrolled, although no nearby areas have been so affected. With decontrol, supply and demand would set your rent.

Arguments for Signing

THERE are two major arguments on the side of signing long-term leases with rent increases up to 15 per cent.

You may, depending on your individual situation, gain some advantage, such as improved service, or decorating of your rented quarters.

And a lease signed now will have to run at least through December 31, 1949, which means that it will fix your rent for at least nine months after controls are now set to expire, March 31, 1949.

Additionally, although it always seems to surprise many tenants, there are some tenants who honestly believe that their landlord is entitled to a higher rent because of increased costs.

Insofar as landlords are concerned, the long-term leases, of course, may possibly cut into their profit position after rent controls expire. They have to decide whether it is to their advantage to make such terms.

Some Decontrolled

ANY housing units on which leases were terminated before the new law became effective on April 1 are now permanently decontrolled. Where leases calling for 15 per cent increases are terminated between now and March 31, 1949, the landlord can continue to charge at the 15 per cent increase level even without a new lease.

The tenant gains one new measure of protection under the eviction proceedings of the new law, 60 days' notice is required in most cases, but landlords now can take over housing for members of their immediate families, in addition to themselves.

The housing expediter, under the 1948 Act, no longer holds the final word on rent levels. Differences between him and the area boards can be decided in the Emergency Court of Appeals if the boards desire, but the expediter is given tighter control over the boards' membership, and either tenants' or landlords' groups involved can now call for publicly advertised board meetings.

In addition, the expediter can now go into court and get an injunction to prevent a landlord from violating almost any portion of the new law, instead of just rental overcharges as before.

Building Curbs Off

THE 1948 law removed the last remaining construction curbs, those on amusements and recreational construction. It also decontrolled furnished, nonhousekeeping rooms in homes where there are no more than two paying guests. The latter action may have wide effect in this area where thousands of Government workers reside in private homes.

While the law also placed a one-month-rent-limit on "security deposits," where such practices were in effect prior to January 30, 1942, there have been few reported complaints of such actions in this area.

Another provision of the new law not expected to have particular area significance is the ban on evictions from cooperatives where less than 65 per cent of the units are occupied by stockholders. This clause was aimed at "dummy" cooperatives, reportedly set up by landlords in some areas.

Early Decision

WHETHER the District will follow the Federal rent law will be decided soon.

One move to authorize long-term leases here with rent increases up to 15 per cent was narrowly defeated on a tie vote this past week, when the Senate District Committee reported out a bill which would decontrol transient hotel rooms and new or converted housing accommodations placed on the market after March 31, 1948, and nonhousekeeping rooms in homes with two or fewer paying tenants.

Such accommodations have been decontrolled elsewhere under Federal rent legislation.

Arguing against the increased rent leases, which is far from a dead issue, District Rent Control Administrator Robert F. Cogswell took the position that reasonable adjustments for landlords have been made here since 1942, when the first District rent-control law went into effect.

Rent increases authorized for multifamily apartment buildings here since last August have been 8 per cent, Cogswell said, and prior to last August about 6 or 7 per cent.

Since 1942, figures at his office show, 50,157 rent-increase petitions have been granted here. This figure is exclusive of many increases ranging between 4 and 5 per cent for less than nine-family dwellings, authorized October 1, 1948.

Rent increases, says Cogswell, have been granted on about 65 per cent of all rental property in the District, and with the exception of hotels, no increases have been above 10 per cent.

Washington, however, shows less of an increase in average rents over prewar days than any major city surveyed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Cogswell's answer to landlords on this is that rents here were generally higher than most other cities before the war, and local landlords, he says, have enjoyed a higher occupancy rate.

Congress soon will decide that issue for itself, when it acts on the District rent bill. And there is one major factor in that decision which probably will not be voiced on the House or Senate floor—most Congressmen have an extra stake in District rent legislation. They live here.

New Windows Give More Light and Air

NEW LIGHT and more air are entering the modern home, school, office and factory, because of the use of windows fabricated from aluminum extrusions, Building News Service of New York reports.

In the extrusion process, aluminum, in much the same fashion as toothpaste is squeezed from a tube, is pressed through a die and emerges so sharp in detail that extreme accuracy in fitting and joining is possible. Thus a maximum area of glass per square foot of wall opening is obtained because a saving in weight and bulk is realized and narrow faces are possible.

The extrusion process provides other benefits, including strength without waste; the best structural distribution of the metal is obtained at no extra cost, and the thin hollow sections afford increased rigidity, according to the Aluminum Import Corp.

Aluminum windows never swell, warp or stick, and are easily operated at the touch of a finger.

Aluminum weighs approximately one third as much as most other metals, and factory-completed windows of this metal can be installed easily, without refitting or exterior painting, in a minimum of time.

Double-hung windows, formerly operated by old-fashioned counterweights, when made of almuinum give long life with light touch-response because they are operated by such space-saving devices as spring or spiral balances, or can be easily counter-balanced.

Further, they become a permanent part of the structure, requiring little maintenance, for the metal has an extremely high resistance to atmospheric attack and doesn't need repeated coats of protective paint through the years. Where soot or dirt are prevalent, only a periodic scrubbing with soap and water is needed to prevent the grime from becoming tightly adherent.

To Make Bird Survey in Cuba

A survey of the migratory birds that winter in Cuba or pass through on their migration flights has been started this month by three biologists of the Fish and Wildlife Service in cooperation with scientists of the Cuban government.

Through such surveys, the service accumulates a greater knowledge concerning migratory birds in the American Republics and the facts so acquired will eventually lead to the conservation and protection of migratory birds throughout their entire range. The present survey was requested by the Republic of Cuba in accordance with an act of Congress which authorizes scientific and cultural cooperation with the American Republics.

Frederick C. Lincoln, who is in charge of the survey party, and Allen J. Duvall and Thomas D. Burleigh, of the Division of Wildlife Research, have left Washington for Cuba. Lincoln preceded his associates by plane in order to hold discussions with officials of the American Embassy in Havana, and of the Ministry of Agriculture, which will provide cooperating personnel in Cuba.

MARYLAND FARM-ESTATE

This property is one of the landmarks of Prince Georges County improved by an outstanding 10-room 18th Century Brick Mansion situated in a sylvan setting among numerous varieties of ancient trees. There are 200 acres of high-income producing cigarette tobacco soil, 40 in permanent pasture and 60 in woodland.

The property is located only 12 miles from Washington, D. C., in a famous fecund country area surrounded with gentlemen's farming estates and early manor houses—and from this land comes rich earth. In this particular section where there is a limited stretch of concentrate fertility, perculiarly adapted to the growing of cigarette tobacco, came the early Maryland settler, who recognized that Nature has generously endowed this soil with "certain elements," capable of producing a burning quality in the tobacco not known in the other American tobaccos. It is purchased by The American Tobacco Manufacturers to mix with the other tobaccos for its quick-burning quality and it commands an unbelievably high prices on the market.

Southern Maryland, partly in this respect, is known as a land apart, shut away agriculturally even from its contiguous territory and has developed a farming operational system peculiarly its own, in that the owner has practically very little overhead labor costs. Here farming becomes an industry, and labor willingly "joins up" in consideration of partnership interest. For this reason, there is proportionately very little property available on the market at any given time in Southern Maryland, as the land continues to be such an exceptional soil investment.

This property is in a high state of production and is organized for general farming and has a good stand of grass for animals. It possesses help houses and a full complement of farm buildings. To the seeker of a delightful country home desiring excellent social environment together with magnificent soil, that can be operated by local help without supervision, yet desirous of being close to the Nation's Capital, this property offers an exceptional opportunity.

Get Chummy With Roses, Is Professor's Advice

SPORTING a "Better Times" rose boutonniere, a prominent horticulturist last week discussed the ethics of rose growing.

"You need to live with your roses," Dr. R. C. Allen, secretary of the American Rose Society, told the annual Institute of Rose Growing at Lisner Auditorium.

Dr. Allen said he visited his roses before leaving for work in the morning, upon returning at night, and over the weekend.

The former Cornell professor gave these hints on how to "Have Fun With Your Roses."

Keep it a hobby. Don't "try too hard" and attempt to grow too many varieties. "Don't be a sucker and make war on the insects," but practice preparedness.

Specialize in certain types of roses. And, he noted, some growers enjoy collecting roses from old cemeteries, making rose stickpins, or, as in the case of his own children, making candy rose petals.

Short Cuts Can Take Drudgery Out of Gardening

By James H. Beattie

THE home garden with a proper balance between ornamentals and food crops should be a source of profit and real enjoyment. Too often, garden work is looked upon as drudgery. There is no reason why this should be the case, because short cuts can help you do the work wtih a minimum of effort. However, it is important to restrain the enthusiasm of early spring and not undertake too much.

This curious season, in which we have literally plunged from winter into spring, has given rise to unusual gardening problems. Right now we should discuss plant growing, the selection of garden sites, garden plans, seed supplies, information on land preparation and fertilization, and the planting of early crops such as potatoes, onions, peas, spinach, kale, radishes, beets and lettuce, as well as many ornamentals.

With shrubbery and fruits bursting into full bloom, as much as three weeks ahead of some seasons, we can only hope that late killing frosts will not occur.

Carefully laid plans for potatoes, peas, spinach, radishes, lettuce and cabbage have been spoiled by rain and wet soil. This misfortune, shared by thousands of gardeners may not turn out badly after all. There is still plenty of time. Several of these cool-weather crops must be planted early or the chances for really good results are none too bright. It is wise the very first time the ground is dry enough to plant these extra early crops.

While waiting for the weather to clear and the ground to dry, there are a number of things that may be done to advance our gardening work.

TOOLS should be examined and new ones obtained if necessary. It does not pay to waste effort by using wornout, dull or poor quality tools. The equipment really needed by the average gardener is not extensive or costly. Avoid gadgets. Stick to the time-tried spade, spading fork, hoe and rake. One should have any tool that is a time and energy saver. Such items of equipment are an excellent investment. While there is time, all garden tools should be cleaned, sharpened when necessary and put in first-class condition for use. Plant stakes, bean poles, trellises and similar material should come in for their share of attention. Don't forget that plant stakes make it possible to greatly increase the productive capacity of garden space. They are worth careful attention.

SEED SUPPLIES are important matters needing attention right now. Seed houses are approaching the peak of their busy season, so it is wise to select your seeds and obtain them now. Purchase only the quantities needed for the space to be devoted to each crop. Miscellaneous Publication No. 538, "Gardening in Town and Country," contains tables showing the correct quantities of vegetable seed required for specified areas. The publication may be obtained by writing to Information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington 25, D. C.

Most gardeners will do best by confining their attention to the tried and tested varieties. Unless a variety is known to be capable of producing a large crop of high quality in Washington area let it alone. If the growing of untried varieties and novelties is engaged in, one should do so with the full realization that the results may be disappointing.

NOW is a good time to clean up the garden space. Removing trash from last year's garden or cleaning up a new area is a task that need not wait for favorable weather. It is well to clean up the borders, hedges and nearby areas to destroy weed seeds, disease organisms, hibernating insects and field mice. Material known to be insect and disease free may be plowed under or placed in the compost heap, but it is a good plan to burn or otherwise dispose of any questionable material.

DON'T work soil too wet! This spring, with many forms of vegetation in an advanced stage of development, there is a strong temptation to work the soil before it has dried enough. Squeeze a handful into a ball, if it crumbles when released it is safe to work, but if it clings together in a ball it is too wet. When making this test examine the soil a few inches below the surface, not the top layers, which are the driest and not a fair sample.

Sandy soils are not so sensitive and may be worked with less regard to the degree of wetness, but it is far better to avoid stirring them up until the top few inches are in a moderately dry condition. Wet soils of any texture are usually cold and unsuitable for either seeding or planting. It will pay any gardener to wait patiently until his ground is dry enough to be worked without injury.

ROSES need attention now. Roses hilled with earth last fall (manure should not be used for this purpose) should be carefully dug out now. The wood under the mound is soft and tender and a damp, cloudy or rainy day should be selected for this work. The earth should be carefully removed from around the stems and leveled around the plants. The buds and sprouts on the stems are very tender and the greatest care should be taken to avoid injury. The work may be done with a blunt stick or with the hands in heavy gloves. After removing the mound, sprinkle the stems to remove adhering soil. Then spray with a weak solution of lime-sulphur—1 part of lime sulphur to 10 parts of water, weaker if growth has started.

There is no hurry about pruning roses too closely. Dead canes several inches long may be cut back a few inches, but it is a good plan to leave a few inches of the dead wood above the living tissue. This will prevent more die-back and tend to keep out the saw-fly. Foremost rose authorities advise against the application of fertilizer to newly set rose plants. Established plants may well receive a moderate application of fertilizer at this season.

Next Week.—Some short cuts on soil preparation and more timely topics.

Simple Ways to Keep Furniture Looking Well

1. LIGHT BURNS on wood surfaces can often be removed with scratch-removing furniture polish. Deeper burns require more elaborate treatment with steel wool, bottled turpentine, and shellac, finished with the bottled scratch-removing polish

2. SPOTS AND STAINS on upholstered furniture, particularly grease spots, should be removed as promptly as possible. Use bottled carbon tetracholoride rubbed in lightly with a soft cloth. Blot up excess with a clean white blotter. Continue this treatment until spot is gone.

3. THE CAMPHOR BOTTLE from your medicine cabinet is a valuable assistant in removing heat marks from varnished or shellacked surfaces. Rub it on with a damp cloth and finish with your regular polishing procedure. For watermarks use bottled oil of peppermint

4. ONE ANTIDOTE for scratches in furniture is a bottled polish made for the purpose. This scratch-removing polish incorporates a stain which makes the scratch invisible. For deeper scratches, apply a touch-up wood stain available in small bottles

High replacement costs of furniture today make care of our household furnishings especially important.

Regular shampooing for upholstered furniture and polishing and waxing for wood furniture pay rich dividends.

Furniture that is used daily is subject to blemishes and scars that should receive immediate attention. Sometimes professional treatment is required, but most of these minor repairs can be made by any homemaker.

A bottle of carbon tetrachloride is your best friend for spots and stains on upholstered furniture. This has little or no effect on fibers or color of the fabric. However, it is always best to test the upholstery in an inconspicuous spot before proceeding.

For Grease, Oil

Moisten a clean soft cloth to sponge the spot, working from the outside of the spot toward the center. After each application blot with a clean white blotter or absorbent cloth to take up the dirt.

Cleaning fluids with a carbon tetrachloride base are particularly effective for grease or oil spots.

Wood furniture surface damaged by white water marks, alcohol stains, heat marks, scratches and occasional burns should be treated as promptly as possible.

White water marks may be removed from a waxed surface by removing the old wax (do this by applying bottled liquid wax freely and wiping up while still wet). Then apply a fresh coat of wax.

For other finishes wring a cloth out of water to which a few drops of bottled ammonia have been added and rub spot lightly.

Alcohol stains from perfumes, beverages or medicine should be wiped up immediately with an oiled cloth. If stains have been neglected, apply a mixture of rotten stone or powdered pumice and bottled lemon oil.

Rub on with a circular motion, wiping up immediately with a cloth moistened with lemon oil. Wipe dry with a clean soft cloth and polish.

Camphor Helpful

For heat marks on varnish or shellac finishes, call on the camphor bottle from your medicine cabinet. Rub on with a damp cloth. When it has dried thoroughly, polish with bottled furniture polish.

A special scratch-remover furniture polish if effective for scratches on polished surfaces. For deep scratches, use a touch-up wood stain available in small bottles with a fine brush attached to the cap. When dry, polish in the usual way.

Furniture polish may also remove the effects of light surface burns. For severe burns, try rubbing with fine steel wool (grade O). Brush away scrapings and rub on bottled turpentine with a soft lintless cloth. When it is dry cover with a thin coating of white shellac. Finish off with scratch-remover furniture polish.

Athens Rations Dwindling Water

ATHENS (AP).—Athens, swollen to 1,500,000 persons, faces a critical water shortage.

Private residences have running water only three hours every other day. Hotels, jammed full of Americans, British and French, have constant running water. They've been warned, however, that if their consumption is not reduced 40 per cent, water will be apportioned them on a par with that to private residences.

Athens gets its water chiefly from the Marathon Dam northwest of the city. Due to the recent drought and current consumption, the dam has been nearly emptied.

Veterans Making New Beginnings As Brick Masons

MORE than 10,000 veterans and other young men are registered and receiving training as apprentice brick masons, Roy A. Shipley, president of the Structural Clay Products Institute, said yesterday.

"The number of apprentice masons has increased 32 per cent in the last year," Shipley added.

"Apprenticeship committees for the training of brick masons have been formed in more than 390 communtiies by approximately 4780 employers and 420 local unions.

"Twenty-eight States report 100 or more apprentices, led by Ohio with 1129, Illinois with 973, and New York with 833.

Capital Gets Booby Prize

By Richard L. Coe

NOW IS THE TIME when everyone is getting awards except, to be sure, oneself.

Last week the New York Drama Critics Circle chose its "bests," "Tony" awards for excellence in theatrical fields were made for the second year and bets are hot for next month's Pulitzer Prize.

The Critics Circle, headed by John Mason Brown, chose Tennessee Williams' "A Streetcar Named Desire" as the best American play of the season. It received 17 of 21 votes.

Two critics named "Mister Roberts" and one each voted for "Command Decision" and "Medea" (the Robinson Jeffers translation rates the Euripedes classic as a new play).

"The Winslow Boy," which began its American career here, was selected as the best foreign play, with 10 votes. Five votes were cast in that clasification for "The Respectful Prostitute," three for "The Old Lady Says 'No'," two for "Where Stars Walk" and one for "Galileo."

The critical circle is bold enough to say "best" in its choices. The board of the American Theater Wing, which awards the Tonys, however, is more catholic, more cautious in its terminology. These, totaling 25 mentions in 20 categories, are for the "outstanding" or "distinguished." They're named for Antoinette Perry, the late director and wartime Wing head.

Only One Saw Washington

TO WASHINGTONIANS, the striking feature of the Tony awards is that only one of these "outstanding achievements" has been seen in the Capital of the most powerful nation on earth.

And that was because the ATW honored Robert Porterfield, whose Barter Theater of Virginia has played here this season in limited auditoriums, performances arranged by a group of civic-minded nonprofessionals. Ironically, Porterfield was named for his "contribution to the development of the regional theater."

Baltimore saw "Mister Roberts," which got Tonys for Thomas Heggen and Joshua Logan who wrote it, another for Logan, who directed it, and a third for Henry Fonda, who plays the title role so effectively.

Philadelphia and Boston saw Jessica Tandy's Tony-winning performance in "A Streetcar Named Desire" and Judith Anderson's "outstanding" acting of "Medea." Baltimore, too, saw Katharine Cornell in "Antony and Cleopatra," the third of the feminine stars to be Tonyed.

Baltimore saw Paul Kelly in "Command Decision" and New England saw Basil Rathbone in "The Heiress," the other two male Tony performances.

(Don't leap to the conclusion that male movie stars dazzled the Wing board; Fonda, Kelly and Rathbone were "round" actors long before the shadows caught them.)

Road Companies, Too

AWARDS went to road companies, too, but neither played Washington. For "spreading theater to the country while the originals perform in New York," prizes went to Mary Martin, heading the touring "Annie Get Your Gun," and Joe E. Brown, in his second season of traipsing with "Harvey."

Other Tony mentions went to Horace Armistead for his scene design of "The Medium," to Mary Percy Schenck for her costumes in "The Heiress," to Jerome Robbins for his dances in "High Button Shoes" and to Max Meth for his conducting in the pit of "Finian's Rainbow."

Not a single one of these "outstanding" jobs has been seen in the Nation's Capital.

Newcomers, too, were Tonyed: June Lockhart of "For Love or Money" and James Whitmore of "Command Decision." Behind-the-scenes awards went to George Gebhart, electrician of four New York plays; Stage Doorman George Pierce of Gotham's Empire Theater; Robert W. Dowling, head of a chain of New York theaters; Manager Paul Beisman, of the American Theater, St. Louis, and Rosamund Gilder, editor of the now defunct Theater Arts Monthly.

To Washington theatergoers, those awards might as well have been made for events on Mars. As a cultural influence in this vaunted seat of the mighty, the theater's a bust.

Award for Harry

WHEELS within wheels, yes, have kept Washington from knowing what all the New York shouting's for. The road everywhere has suffered this season. New plays are hard to come by, say the managers, costs are skyward and money's getting tighter. Nor, emphatically, is any of this the fault of the National's able, respected manager, Edmund Plohn.

The fact remains, the population in this area rates tops in the census college graduate standings; it also boasts a steady, regular income, of which department store business is a good index. The producers insist that they're "in business," but they're certainly odd business men to pass up Washington's theater business.

So the New York Critics Circle and the Tony Committee have had their thrill of largesse. It's only just that a voice from the wilderness be heard amid these paeans of adulation. This department, too, has its Tony:

Be it then, an award:

For his role in making it possible that residents of this gurrate and gallorious Nation's Capital see the outstanding plays and performances of our day,

For his importance to one end of a 225-mile steel ribbon,

To W. Harry Marks, station master of Washington's Union Station.

Gleason Discovers Gold But Can't Be Bothered

HOLLYWOOD April 3 (AP).—Gold—the real thing—has been discovered in these here hills by James Gleason. But don't expect any new gold rush to California.

Of all places, the discovery was made in the wealthy Mandeville Canyon district where Gleason, Jean Arthur, MacDonald Carey, Gregory Peck and many other Hollywood personalities live. A bulldozer uncovered an outcrop of gold-bearing quartz on Jimmy's land.

Jimmy says the gold assays at only $12.75 per ton, so he's not going to mine the ore.

She Knows What to Do With Rings

THIS IS LALAGE, daredevil glamour girl, who knows more than the ordinary lass about what to do with rings. Formerly a Ringling circus light, Lalage will appear here April 19 to 25 at Uline Arena, when the Eighth Annual Shrine Circus holds forth. The circus, which will offer 40 acts this year—10 more than on any previous program—is being put on to benefit Almas Temple Charities and Activities Fund and Crippled Children's Hospitals of North America.

Overtones of Peace and War in Week's New Films

PEACEFUL is this shot of June Haver in a bathing suit she doesn't promise to wear for the swimming scenes of "Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay!" June stars in this Technicolor version of the best-seller with Lon McCallister, opening Thursday at the Capitol

WARLIKE is this scene on the Normandy beach. The figures you see through the wrecked American vessel of D-Day are Viveca Lindfors and Dennis Morgan, who arrive Thursday at the Warner in "To the Victor," a story of black-market dealings in present-day France

Lots Filled With It

War Surplus Crashes Film

By Howard C. Heyn

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (AP).—War surplus—millions of dollars worth—is finding its way into the movies.

After World War I studio property men had to rent battle gear at high rates. This time they're buying it cheap. The big lots are filled with stuff which, sooner or later, will turn up in pictures.

Some equipment is good for any war. Weapons may change, but other items can pass close scrutiny in scenes at Chateau Thierry or Iwo Jima. Tent stakes, for instance. Or blankets. Not all of it gets on the screen. Aluminum cooking sets, field telephones and walkie-talkies are used by studio crews on location.

Fred Knoth, special effects director at Universal-International, is having a field day with mechanical odds and ends picked up at surplus sales. For "The Wonderful Race at Rimrock," Knoth and his men rigged up a self-opening suitcase used by Donald O'Connor as a liniment salesman. He did it with oxygen tanks, tubing, four-way valves and a bomb door jack.

Heavy Buyer

The War Assets Administration has classed film studios among the Nation's heaviest buyers of war surplus. A Government survey shows that equipment costing 10 million dollars originally has been purchased by picture companies. They paid far less than half that amount for what they got.

Columbia Studios claim the record for volume of war surplus used, in the Red Skelton picture, "The Fuller Brush Man." Two big sound stages were filled with plastic airplane gun turrets, rubber life rafts, camouflage nets and other equipment to background a scene in which the villains chase Skelton through a warehouse.

In Paramount's "The Long Grey Line," a story about West Point, war surplus is extensively employed. Quantities of rubber bags went into special effects for "Till the Clouds Roll By."

Twentieth Century-Fox bought a fleet of field trucks, jeeps, commercial cars and weapons carriers. Some were modified to carry properties and wardrobes to locations or sound stages.

Suzi Crandall is shown here with a "Gibson Girl"—or maybe it's the other way around. At any rate, the Suzi Crandall—that is, er, the "Gibson Girl"—is a war surplus wireless gadget which nurtures a secret hope that it may break into pictures one day. Suzi has similar aspirations

Two-way radios and beachmasters' trumpets have been adapted to the needs of movie directors in the field. Army vacuum carts which transported hot food to combat units now are used to feed film crews on back lots or locations. In "That Lady in Ermine," the carts kept food steaming realistically through many takes of a banquet scene.

Universal-International has converted a tank retriever to a stand-by generator, parachutes and airplane target kits to furniture covers.

Madeleine at Work

U. N. Is Backing Film Venture

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (AP).—Madeleine Carroll and her husband, Henri Lavorel, are producing two-reel films to promote better understanding among peoples of the world. The United Nations is backing the venture.

The company's two films, one made in Italy and one in France, are intimate reports of life among ordinary people.

Their purpose, the actress explained, is to show that people are essentially the same the world over. They have the same human qualities, the same weaknesses and the same assets of character.

The project stems from the couple's conviction that wars are started at the top but can be prevented at the bottom, if all men and women will rid themselves of distrust and suspicion of that which is foreign.

Miss Carroll said she conceived the idea in France when, after the war, she observed that American armed forces conducted themselves more like a conquering army than as Allies of the French. The French, unable to understand this attitude, were resentful.

Endeavoring to dispel this misconception of America as a whole, she made a series of radio broadcasts for which she received the French Legion of Honor.

Lavorel and Miss Carroll plan to make films all over Europe and Asia in the coming years. Lavorel, an official of the United Nations, directs the pictures and Miss Carroll will appear in some of them.

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Paramount has been paying $2.50 a load to have refuse hauled away from the studio lot. Along comes "The Great Gatsby," with a scene of a Jersey City dumping ground. That's right—the studio paid $2.50 a load to have the junk hauled back to the studio.

Radio In Review

Man Turns Against His Voice

By John Crosby

THERE are now almost as many talking animals on the air as there are in the Oz books. Perhaps the most widely known is Willie the Penguin who invites us to "Smoke Kools! Smoke Kools! Smoke Kools!" about once a minute on somebody's radio station.

One of the newer animals to hit the big time is Sunny, the Schenley rooster. Sunny strides out in front of television audiences in eight cities, clamoring: "Schenley presents." In addition, this particularly talented rooster holds up cards spelling out Cresta Blanca. Two other fowl crowing prophetically on the air are the Sal Hepatica rooster and the "Information, Please" rooster. These two stick to their native language, however.

The assistance of Silver, a veteran radio actor, has been enlisted in singing the praises of Cheerios. Silver doesn't talk either; he bangs it out with his hoofbeats—"Cheerio! Cheerio! Cheerio!" I'm indebted to a man named Charles Slocum, who comments on the lighter aspects of the news over the Mutual Broadcasting System, for the following observation on that parrot that sells sparkling water:

"I don't doubt that a parrot can say 'Evervess,'" complains Slocum. "I'll even admit that he can spell it. But they go just a wee bit too far when the parrot calls for the attention of tavern and hotel owners by saying 'Psst!' Show me the parrot that can say 'Psst!' and I'll take a shower in whatever he's selling."

It's a Revolt

THERE seems to be a revolt against the human voice and we are substituting for it the commands not only of animals but also of nonliving objects. A train may be heard almost any time of the day or night wailing for Bromo Seltzer; a fog horn warns in ominous tones of the reefs of B. O. Macy's calls the faithful over the radio by the candid sound of a cash register, indicating, by some inverse symbolism I don't understand at all, thrift.

The motion picture industry has contributed a new spot commercial in which a saw—assisted, it's true, by human voices—does its best to sing "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House." Ford has given us a talking Ford and Kaiser-Fraser sings of the wonders of Kaiser-Fraser through a sonovox.

We're just tired of the sound of the human voice, that's all; tired and suspicious. If a rooster proclaims his faith in the product, he has behind him the immemorial wisdom of nature, the weight of oracle, the indisputability of portent—to say nothing of the gift of tongues. If Joe Doakes says it, it's just one man's opinion, probably corrupt, certainly suspect, and smelling of mortality.

The Aces Are Back

GOODMAN ACE, one of the few genuine wits in radio and one of the veterans, is back in business again (WTOP—CBS, 7 p. m. Saturdays) with a new show called "mr. ace and JANE," an arrangement of capital and lower case letters which spells out pretty well who ranks in the Ace family. The new program differs from the old Easy Aces in about the same manner as the new and old "Amos 'n' Andy" programs. It's once a week, half-hour, streamlined, up-to-date, and very, very funny.

Jane Ace is another Dulcy, another Irma, another Gracie Allen, another Mrs. Malaprop, though in her defense it ought to be added she got there ahead of most of them. She is a woman of sunny amiability who takes an extremely literal and subjective view of everything around her. This makes life very easy for her and extremely difficult for everyone else.

When, for example, she is told she is to be a member of a jury, she declares heatedly: "I'll say he's not guilty whoever he is. If he's nice enough to pay me $3 a day to be his jury, the least I can do is recuperate, doesn't it to you?"

There are a lot of Malaprops in radio but none of them scrambles a cliche quite

Lynn Bringing Her Soprano Back to Capitol

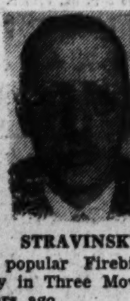
LYNN ALLISON is coming back to the Capitol Theater Thursday to sing with Sam Jack Kauffman's orchestra. "Coming back" is the phrase—for Lynn sang at the Capitol a record-breaking seven years. Lately she's been playing mother to 14-month-old Joseph S. McCoy 3d. Her lullabys have kept the Allison soprano as clear as her old admirers recall.

Brushed by Genius

Stravinsky Walks With the Great

By Paul Hume

MANY conductors, composers, teachers and musicians in all paths insist that Igor Stravinsky is the greatest living musician.



STRAVINSKY

This afternoon the Russian-born, American citizen composer-conductor will direct the final concert of the National Symphony Orchestra. The program will consist of four works covering a period of almost 40 years. Each phase of Stravinsky's development as composer is represented in the list, from the early and immensely popular Firebird Suite, to the Symphony in Three Movements, written two years ago.

Striking illustration of Stravinsky's genius is found in the January issue of Dance Index, especially planned to review and evaluate Stravinsky's work in music today. Articles in that issue are by such outstanding figures as Ernest Ansermet, Jean Cocteau, George Balanchine, Lincoln Kirstein, Pierre Monteux, Carlos Chavez, Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Darius Milhaud, William Schuman, Leonard Bernstein and half a dozen more.

Since the early triumphs of Firebird, Petrouchka, and the Rite of Spring, there has been little time when Stravinsky was not the center of discussions and more often than not, of conflicts.

'Idea' Lady Yearns to Get Gals Got

By Aline Mosby

"HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (UP).—The man shortage here is terrible. There are so many lonely divorcees and widows that a lady has swooped into town to marry 'em all off. Yep—even the glammer girls of movietown.

This savior is a chubby, twinkly eyed housewife named Mrs. Nelle Stull of Elyria, Ohio. Twenty-six years ago she founded the Widow and Widowers Club, whose members write to each other with marriage ideas tucked coyly between the lines.

Mrs. Stull's latest project is not one bit coy. It's an outright plot to marry women off. She calls it the "Try Again" Club. So many ladies out here are in need of trying it again, she says, that she trained west on her own dough to do something about it.

We streaked over to Mrs. Stull's hotel room and found her plowing through names, letters, etc.

It's the Loneliest

"CALIFORNIA," she sang out, "is the loneliest State in the world. This city is the loneliest in the State. Something must be done about these poor women. They want desperately to marry. It's the climate, I think. Romantic ideas flourish here.

"I want old-time actresses to organize my 'Try Again' Club in Hollywood. There are many older stars that should marry again. I don't know why they don't. They are afraid, I guess, they won't get such a good catch as their last one.

"Don't believe the ones who say they live alone and like it. Every woman," she gushed on, "needs a man. Women never get too old for love."

Her "Try Again" Club is open to single, young gals, too. She'll be glad to have 'em come around to meet any unsuspecting gents who'll be lured to club parties.

"But it's the older ones I'm worried about," she sighed. "Already a couple of bit actresses have joined the club. In Hollywood so many women lose their husbands and their careers fade. Then they take to drink.

"They should marry an older man who will care for them. Sixty or 65 is a good age. Then a man is over that idea of chasing young girls."

Cat Trouble

NELLE'S worst problem is catty women. One widow meets a man. She doesn't like him. Does she pass him on to her sisters in need?

"No!" boomed Mrs. Stull. "Women are jealous. They never help each other. That's where my club parties come in.

"You know, there are six million girls getting out of college this year who never will have a look-in on marriage? If these young girls can't catch husbands, think how hard it is for the older women, and what will happen if we have another war and more men are killed . . . ?" she cluck-clucked.

"Young lady," said the Try Again founder, "if you have a prospect around at all, for heaven's sake marry him or you won't have a chance to even try once."

We departed in search on the double.

Glen Echo Opens Saturday, 1 P. M.

GLEN ECHO amusement park reopens Saturday at 1 p. m.

Though this is as an official announcement that spring is here, as local mankind can ask, the Glen Echo management smiles ruefully at the opening of several years ago.

Then the usual months of winter clean-up about the 40-acre park had readied the attractions for ushering in the open-air season. A Washington Post photographer arrived to snap the lines of youngsters waiting at the gate. What made his picture worth while was a downpour of snow; he snapped the youngsters playing in the April snow in a setting usually wreathed by photographers in the greenery of summer.

This year will find a large new building along the midway facing the "Flying Scooter" ride. There's a new skeeball alley.

Back to the ballroom come Paul Kain and his 12-piece orchestra, with Helen Martin as vocalist. The ballroom will be open for dancing from 9 p. m. to midnight, Sundays excepted.

The pool will not be open until May 27.

Glen Echo is reached by Route 20 streetcars or by driving straight out Massachusetts ave. Admission to the park will be free, with charges on individual attractions.

NOW IS THE TIME when everyone is getting awards except, to be sure, oneself.

Last week the New York Drama Critics Circle chose its "bests," "Tony" awards for excellence in theatrical fields were made for the second year and bets are hot for next month's Pulitzer Prize.

The Critics Circle, headed by John Mason Brown, chose Tennessee Williams' "A Streetcar Named Desire" as the best American play of the season. It received 17 of 21 votes.

Two critics named "Mister Roberts" and one each voted for "Command Decision" and "Medea" (the Robinson Jeffers translation rates the Euripedes classic as a new play).

"The Winslow Boy," which began its American career here, was selected as the best foreign play, with 10 votes. Five votes were cast in that clasification for "The Respectful Prostitute," three for "The Old Lady Says 'No'," two for "Where Stars Walk" and one for "Galileo."

The critical circle is bold enough to say "best" in its choices. The board of the American Theater Wing, which awards the Tonys, however, is more catholic, more cautious in its terminology. These, totaling 25 mentions in 20 categories, are for the "outstanding" or "distinguished." They're named for Antoinette Perry, the late director and wartime Wing head.

Only One Saw Washington

TO WASHINGTONIANS, the striking feature of the Tony awards is that only one of these "outstanding achievements" has been seen in the Capital of the most powerful nation on earth.

And that was because the ATW honored Robert Porterfield, whose Barter Theater of Virginia has played here this season in limited auditoriums, performances arranged by a group of civic-minded nonprofessionals. Ironically, Porterfield was named for his "contribution to the development of the regional theater."

Baltimore saw "Mister Roberts," which got Tonys for Thomas Heggen and Joshua Logan who wrote it, another for Logan, who directed it, and a third for Henry Fonda, who plays the title role so effectively.

Philadelphia and Boston saw Jessica Tandy's Tony-winning performance in "A Streetcar Named Desire" and Judith Anderson's "outstanding" acting of "Medea." Baltimore, too, saw Katharine Cornell in "Antony and Cleopatra," the third of the feminine stars to be Tonyed.

Baltimore saw Paul Kelly in "Command Decision" and New England saw Basil Rathbone in "The Heiress," the other two male Tony performances.

(Don't leap to the conclusion that male movie stars dazzled the Wing board; Fonda, Kelly and Rathbone were "round" actors long before the shadows caught them.)

Road Companies, Too

AWARDS went to road companies, too, but neither played Washington. For "spreading theater to the country while the originals perform in New York," prizes went to Mary Martin, heading the touring "Annie Get Your Gun," and Joe E. Brown, in his second season of traipsing with "Harvey."

Other Tony mentions went to Horace Armistead for his scene design of "The Medium," to Mary Percy Schenck for her costumes in "The Heiress," to Jerome Robbins for his dances in "High Button Shoes" and to Max Meth for his conducting in the pit of "Finian's Rainbow."

Not a single one of these "outstanding" jobs has been seen in the Nation's Capital.

Newcomers, too, were Tonyed: June Lockhart of "For Love or Money" and James Whitmore of "Command Decision." Behind-the-scenes awards went to George Gebhart, electrician of four New York plays; Stage Doorman George Pierce of Gotham's Empire Theater; Robert W. Dowling, head of a chain of New York theaters; Manager Paul Beisman, of the American Theater, St. Louis, and Rosamund Gilder, editor of the now defunct Theater Arts Monthly.

To Washington theatergoers, those awards might as well have been made for events on Mars. As a cultural influence in this vaunted seat of the mighty, the theater's a bust.

Award for Harry

WHEELS within wheels, yes, have kept Washington from knowing what all the New York shouting's for. The road everywhere has suffered this season. New plays are hard to come by, say the managers, costs are skyward and money's getting tighter. Nor, emphatically, is any of this the fault of the National's able, respected manager, Edmund Plohn.

The fact remains, the population in this area rates tops in the census college graduate standings; it also boasts a steady, regular income, of which department store business is a good index. The producers insist that they're "in business," but they're certainly odd business men to pass up Washington's theater business.

So the New York Critics Circle and the Tony Committee have had their thrill of largesse. It's only just that a voice from the wilderness be heard amid these paeans of adulation. This department, too, has its Tony:

Be it then, an award:

For his role in making it possible that residents of this gurrate and gallorious Nation's Capital see the outstanding plays and performances of our day,

For his importance to one end of a 225-mile steel ribbon,

To W. Harry Marks, station master of Washington's Union Station.

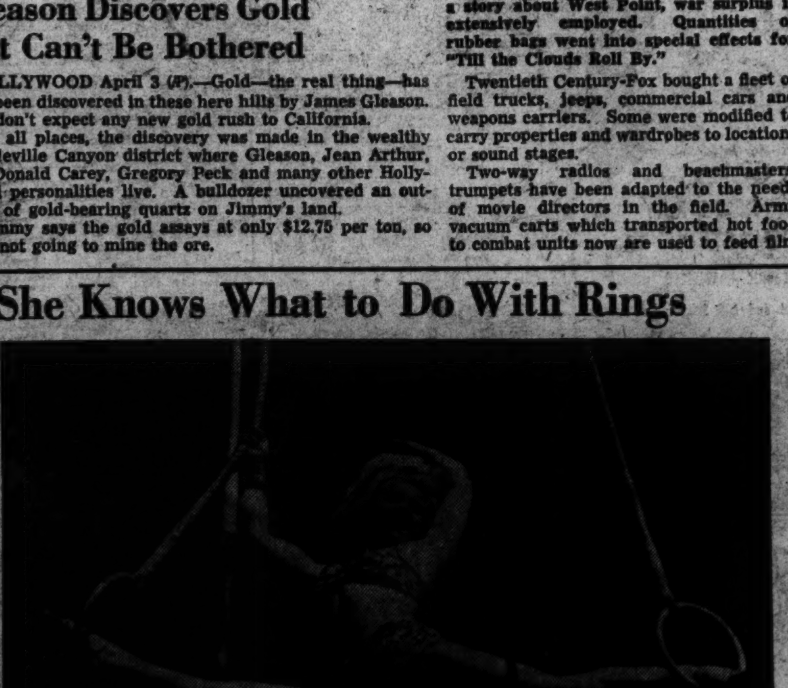
Gleason Discovers Gold But Can't Be Bothered

HOLLYWOOD April 3 (AP).—Gold—the real thing—has been discovered in these here hills by James Gleason. But don't expect any new gold rush to California.

Of all places, the discovery was made in the wealthy Mandeville Canyon district where Gleason, Jean Arthur, MacDonald Carey, Gregory Peck and many other Hollywood personalities live. A bulldozer uncovered an outcrop of gold-bearing quartz on Jimmy's land.

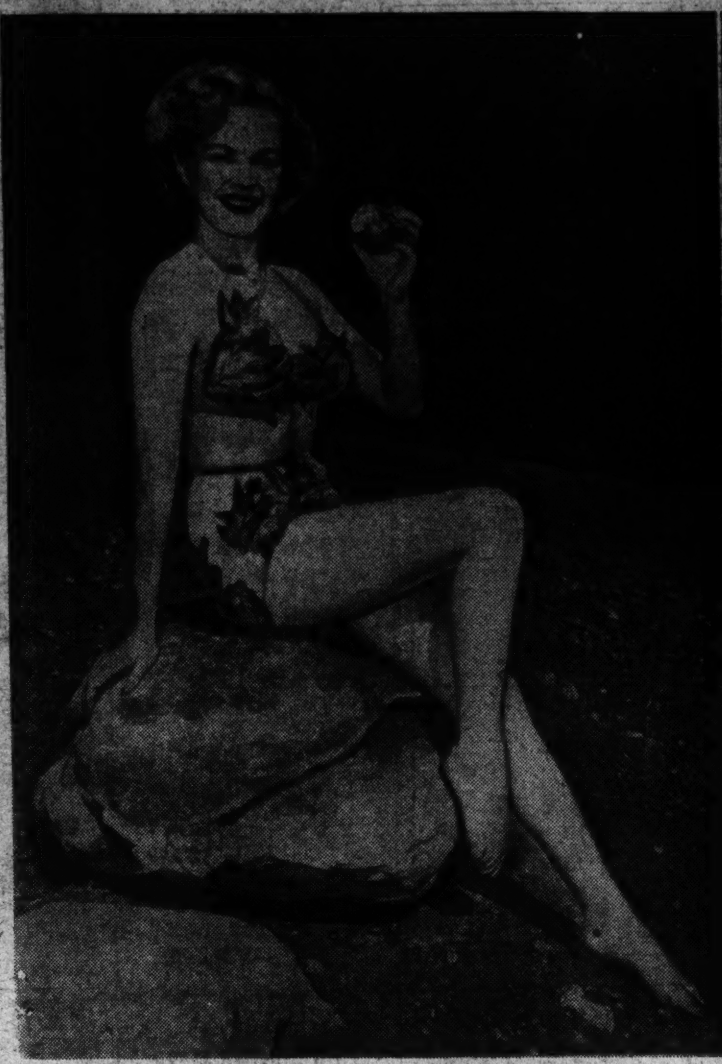
Jimmy says the gold assays at only $12.75 per ton, so he's not going to mine the ore.

She Knows What to Do With Rings



THIS IS LALAGE, daredevil glamour girl, who knows more than the ordinary lass about what to do with rings. Formerly a Ringling circus light, Lalage will appear here April 19 to 25 at Uline Arena, when the Eighth Annual Shrine Circus holds forth. The circus, which will offer 40 acts this year—10 more than on any previous program—is being put on to benefit Almas Temple Charities and Activities Fund and Crippled Children's Hospitals of North America.

Overtones of Peace and War in Week's New Films



PEACEFUL is this shot of June Haver in a bathing suit she doesn't promise to wear for the swimming scenes of "Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay!" June stars in this Technicolor version of the best-seller with Lon McCallister, opening Thursday at the Capitol

WARLIKE is this scene on the Normandy beach. The figures you see through the wrecked American vessel of D-Day are Viveca Lindfors and Dennis Morgan, who arrive Thursday at the Warner in "To the Victor," a story of black-market dealings in present-day France

Lots Filled With It

War Surplus Crashes Film

By Howard C. Heyn

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (AP).—War surplus—millions of dollars worth—is finding its way into the movies.

After World War I studio property men had to rent battle gear at high rates. This time they're buying it cheap. The big lots are filled with stuff which, sooner or later, will turn up in pictures.

Some equipment is good for any war. Weapons may change, but other items can pass close scrutiny in scenes at Chateau Thierry or Iwo Jima. Tent stakes, for instance. Or blankets. Not all of it gets on the screen. Aluminum cooking sets, field telephones and walkie-talkies are used by studio crews on location.

Fred Knoth, special effects director at Universal-International, is having a field day with mechanical odds and ends picked up at surplus sales. For "The Wonderful Race at Rimrock," Knoth and his men rigged up a self-opening suitcase used by Donald O'Connor as a liniment salesman. He did it with oxygen tanks, tubing, four-way valves and a bomb door jack.

Heavy Buyer

The War Assets Administration has classed film studios among the Nation's heaviest buyers of war surplus. A Government survey shows that equipment costing 10 million dollars originally has been purchased by picture companies. They paid far less than half that amount for what they got.

Columbia Studios claim the record for volume of war surplus used, in the Red Skelton picture, "The Fuller Brush Man." Two big sound stages were filled with plastic airplane gun turrets, rubber life rafts, camouflage nets and other equipment to background a scene in which the villains chase Skelton through a warehouse.

In Paramount's "The Long Grey Line," a story about West Point, war surplus is extensively employed. Quantities of rubber bags went into special effects for "Till the Clouds Roll By."

Twentieth Century-Fox bought a fleet of field trucks, jeeps, commercial cars and weapons carriers. Some were modified to carry properties and wardrobes to locations or sound stages.

Two-way radios and beachmasters' trumpets have been adapted to the needs of movie directors in the field. Army vacuum carts which transported hot food to combat units now are used to feed film crews on back lots or locations. In "That Lady in Ermine," the carts kept food steaming realistically through many takes of a banquet scene.

Universal-International has converted a tank retriever to a stand-by generator, parachutes and airplane target kits to furniture covers.

Suzi Crandall is shown here with a "Gibson Girl"—or maybe it's the other way around. At any rate, the Suzi Crandall—that is, er, the "Gibson Girl"—is a war surplus wireless gadget which nurtures a secret hope that it may break into pictures one day. Suzi has similar aspirations

Madeleine at Work

U. N. Is Backing Film Venture

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (AP).—Madeleine Carroll and her husband, Henri Lavorel, are producing two-reel films to promote better understanding among peoples of the world. The United Nations is backing the venture.

The company's two films, one made in Italy and one in France, are intimate reports of life among ordinary people.

Their purpose, the actress explained, is to show that people are essentially the same the world over. They have the same human qualities, the same weaknesses and the same assets of character.

The project stems from the couple's conviction that wars are started at the top but can be prevented at the bottom, if all men and women will rid themselves of distrust and suspicion of that which is foreign.

Miss Carroll said she conceived the idea in France when, after the war, she observed that American armed forces conducted themselves more like a conquering army than as Allies of the French. The French, unable to understand this attitude, were resentful.

Endeavoring to dispel this misconception of America as a whole, she made a series of radio broadcasts for which she received the French Legion of Honor.

Lavorel and Miss Carroll plan to make films all over Europe and Asia in the coming years. Lavorel, an official of the United Nations, directs the pictures and Miss Carroll will appear in some of them.

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Paramount has been paying $2.50 a load to have refuse hauled away from the studio lot. Along comes "The Great Gatsby," with a scene of a Jersey City dumping ground. That's right—the studio paid $2.50 a load to have the junk hauled back to the studio.

Radio In Review

Man Turns Against His Voice

By John Crosby

THERE are now almost as many talking animals on the air as there are in the Oz books. Perhaps the most widely known is Willie the Penguin who invites us to "Smoke Kools! Smoke Kools! Smoke Kools!" about once a minute on somebody's radio station.

One of the newer animals to hit the big time is Sunny, the Schenley rooster. Sunny strides out in front of television audiences in eight cities, clamoring: "Schenley presents." In addition, this particularly talented rooster holds up cards spelling out Cresta Blanca. Two other fowl crowing prophetically on the air are the Sal Hepatica rooster and the "Information, Please" rooster. These two stick to their native language, however.

The assistance of Silver, a veteran radio actor, has been enlisted in singing the praises of Cheerios. Silver doesn't talk either; he bangs it out with his hoofbeats—"Cheerio! Cheerio! Cheerio!" I'm indebted to a man named Charles Slocum, who comments on the lighter aspects of the news over the Mutual Broadcasting System, for the following observation on that parrot that sells sparkling water:

"I don't doubt that a parrot can say 'Evervess,'" complains Slocum. "I'll even admit that he can spell it. But they go just a wee bit too far when the parrot calls for the attention of tavern and hotel owners by saying 'Pssst!' Show me the parrot that can say 'Pssst!' and I'll take a shower in whatever he's selling."

It's a Revolt

THERE seems to be a revolt against the human voice and we are substituting for it the commands not only of animals but also of nonliving objects. A train may be heard almost any time of the day or night wailing for Bromo Seltzer; a fog horn warns in ominous tones of the reefs of B. O. Macy's calls the faithful over the radio by the candid sound of a cash register, indicating, by some inverse symbolism I don't understand at all, thrift.

The motion picture industry has contributed a new spot commercial in which a saw—assisted, it's true, by human voices—does its best to sing "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House." Ford has given us a talking Ford and Kaiser-Fraser sings of the wonders of Kaiser-Fraser through a sonovox.

We're just tired of the sound of the human voice, that's all; tired and suspicious. If a rooster proclaims his faith in the product, he has behind him the immemorial wisdom of nature, the weight of oracle, the indisputability of portent—to say nothing of the gift of tongues. If Joe Doakes says it, it's just one man's opinion, probably corrupt, certainly suspect, and smelling of mortality.

The Aces Are Back

GOODMAN ACE, one of the few genuine wits in radio and one of the veterans, is back in business again (WTOP—CBS, 7 p. m. Saturdays) with a new show called "mr. ace and JANE," an arrangement of capital and lower case letters which spells out pretty well who ranks in the Ace family. The new program differs from the old Easy Aces in about the same manner as the new and old "Amos 'n' Andy" programs. It's once a week, half-hour, streamlined, up-to-date, and very, very funny.

Jane Ace is another Dulcy, another Irma, another Gracie Allen, another Mrs. Malaprop, though in her defense it ought to be added she got there ahead of most of them. She is a woman of sunny amiability who takes an extremely literal and subjective view of everything around her. This makes life very easy for her and extremely difficult for everyone else.

When, for example, she is told she is to be a member of a jury, she declares heatedly: "I'll say he's not guilty whoever he is. If he's nice enough to pay me $3 a day to be his jury, the least I can do is recuperate, doesn't it to you?"

There are a lot of Malaprops in radio but none of them scrambles a cliche quite

Lynn Bringing Her Soprano Back to Capitol

LYNN ALLISON is coming back to the Capitol Theater Thursday to sing with Sam Jack Kauffman's orchestra. "Coming back" is the phrase—for Lynn sang at the Capitol a record-breaking seven years. Lately she's been playing mother to 14-month-old Joseph S. McCoy 3d. Her lullabys have kept the Allison soprano as clear as her old admirers recall.

Brushed by Genius

Stravinsky Walks With the Great

By Paul Hume

MANY conductors, composers, teachers and musicians in all paths insist that Igor Stravinsky is the greatest living musician.

STRAVINSKY

This afternoon the Russian-born, American citizen composer-conductor will direct the final concert of the National Symphony Orchestra. The program will consist of four works covering a period of almost 40 years. Each phase of Stravinsky's development as composer is represented in the list, from the early and immensely popular Firebird Suite, to the Symphony in Three Movements, written two years ago.

Striking illustration of Stravinsky's genius is found in the January issue of Dance Index, especially planned to review and evaluate Stravinsky's work in music today. Articles in that issue are by such outstanding figures as Ernest Ansermet, Jean Cocteau, George Balanchine, Lincoln Kirstein, Pierre Monteux, Carlos Chavez, Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Darius Milhaud, William Schuman, Leonard Bernstein and half a dozen more.

Since the early triumphs of Firebird, Petrouchka, and the Rite of Spring, there has been little time when Stravinsky was not the center of discussions and more often than not, of conflicts.

'Idea' Lady Yearns to Get Gals Got

By Aline Mosby

"HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (U.P.)—The man shortage here is terrible. There are so many lonely divorcees and widows that a lady has swooped into town to marry 'em all off. Yep—even the glammer girls of movietown.

This savior is a chubby, twinkly eyed housewife named Mrs. Nelle Stull of Elyria, Ohio. Twenty-six years ago she founded the Widow and Widowers Club, whose members write to each other with marriage ideas tucked coyly between the lines.

Mrs. Stull's latest project is not one bit coy. It's an outright plot to marry women off. She calls it the "Try Again" Club. So many ladies out here are in need of trying it again, she says, that she trained west on her own dough to do something about it.

We streaked over to Mrs. Stull's hotel room and found her plowing through names, letters, etc.

It's the Loneliest

"CALIFORNIA," she sang out, "is the loneliest State in the world. This city is the loneliest in the State. Something must be done about these poor women. They want desperately to marry. It's the climate, I think. Romantic ideas flourish here.

"I want old-time actresses to organize my 'Try Again' Club in Hollywood. There are many older stars that should marry again. I don't know why they don't. They are afraid, I guess, they won't get such a good catch as their last one.

"Don't believe the ones who say they live alone and like it. Every woman," she gushed on, "needs a man. Women never get too old for love."

Her "Try Again" Club is open to single, young gals, too. She'll be glad to have 'em come around to meet any unsuspecting gents who'll be lured to club parties.

"But it's the older ones I'm worried about," she sighed. "Already a couple of bit actresses have joined the club. In Hollywood so many women lose their husbands and their careers fade. Then they take to drink.

"They should marry an older man who will care for them. Sixty or 65 is a good age. Then a man is over that idea of chasing young girls."

Cat Trouble

NELLE'S worst problem is catty women. One widow meets a man. She doesn't like him. Does she pass him on to her sisters in need?

"No!" boomed Mrs. Stull. "Women are jealous. They never help each other. That's where my club parties come in.

"You know, there are six million girls getting out of college this year who never will have a look-in on marriage? If these young girls can't catch husbands, think how hard it is for the older women, and what will happen if we have another war and more men are killed . . . ?" she cluck-clucked.

"Young lady," said the Try Again founder, "if you have a prospect around at all, for heaven's sake marry him or you won't have a chance to even try once."

We departed in search on the double.

Glen Echo Opens Saturday, 1 P. M.

GLEN ECHO amusement park reopens Saturday at 1 p. m.

Though this is as an official announcement that spring is here, as local mankind can ask, the Glen Echo management smiles ruefully at the opening of several years ago.

Then the usual months of winter clean-up about the 40-acre park had readied the attractions for ushering in the open-air season. A Washington Post photographer arrived to snap the lines of youngsters waiting at the gate. What made his picture worth while was a downpour of snow; he snapped the youngsters playing in the April snow in a setting usually wreathed by photographers in the greenery of summer.

This year will find a large new building along the midway facing the "Flying Scooter" ride. There's a new skeeball alley.

Back to the ballroom come Paul Kain and his 12-piece orchestra, with Helen Martin as vocalist. The ballroom will be open for dancing from 9 p. m. to midnight, Sundays excepted.

The pool will not be open until May 27.

Glen Echo is reached by Route 20 streetcars or by driving straight out Massachusetts ave. Admission to the park will be free, with charges on individual attractions.

Victor Moore Turning His Back on Broadway

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (AP).—After 52 years of trouping America, Victor Moore has bought a home and settled in Hollywood.

The wistful comedian purchased the home of Spike Jones and, after moving out the washboards, cow bells, auto horns and whistles, has settled down to a quiet life with his young wife.

MOORE

"I'm not through acting, mind you," he remarked on the "Kiss in the Dark" set. "I'll keep on making films as long as they want me. I'm just tired of traveling and keeping on the move.

"Only an out-of-the-world play would tempt me to go East. And I haven't read any scripts of that quality lately."

Moore still believes the stage is a better medium for comedy and may augment his film work with summer theater appearances.

"It's harder to act before a camera," he said, "especially for a comedian, because he doesn't know if his stuff is going over without an audience. I always do a better job before an audience."

The comic first visited California while appearing on the Orpheum Circuit and resolved that he would return to stay. At 72, he has fulfilled his wish.

"When I started on Broadway, I earned $4 a week and lived on it. A man doesn't develop extravagant tastes with that background," he said.

RANDOM notes on the new flickers . . . "summer holiday" will probably be Mickey Rooney's last role as an adolescent. Preview audiences snickered when the twice-married, twice-a-father Mickey remarked in the film that he was only 17 . . . Note that a Mexican plays a villain in "Treasure of the Sierra Madre." It's one of the few times a foreigner (except of an enemy nation) has been a heavy in a United States film . . .

John Ford's epic, "Fort Apache," appears to be a loosely veiled treatment of Custer's Last Stand. It should give historians a lively time . . . Yale men will wince when they see their beloved drinking tune, The Whiffenpoof Song, sung by a kid chorus in "The Big City" . . . Henry Morgan Endows Trailer With New Twist

HOLLYWOOD, April 3 (U.P.).—Well, sir, Henry Morgan's gone and made a two-minute movie. You can see this miniature masterpiece standing in the theater aisle.

Some people might call it a "trailer." That is, it's actually the thing which will show up in the theaters a couple of days before Morgan's full-length movie, "So This Is New York."

But when the rules for making trailers were passed around, Mr. Morgan was out having a beer.

Morgan's midget movie does not advertise his big picture as (1) supercolossal, (2) the greatest since, etc., etc., and those other superlatives that make you wonder why the "coming attraction" always sounds better than the movie you paid cash to look at.

This "trailer" doesn't even say you have to see "So This Is New York." Most trailers scream "don't miss it . . ." Morgan philosophically remarks that if you want to see the movie, okay, and if you don't well, drop around and we'll recommend one you'll like.

Usually a trailer is patched together from scenes the director didn't use. Then a narration is scribbled out in a couple of days. It promises you're gonna see the hottest love, the goriest murders, the loveliest toenails, etc.

Mr. Morgan and Screenplays, Inc., went about their trailer in a slightly different way.

"Morgan pokes fun at movie trailers on his radio show, so we did the same," explained the producer, Stanley Kramer.

This turned out to be a full-sized project. Kramer & Co. spent almost as much time making the trailer as the full-length picture.

The writers who wrote "So This Is New York" wrote a script for the trailer, too. Quite unorthodox. It has a sort of plot, which they polished to perfection. From last October until last week the studio slaved on Morgan's two-minute movie.

The studio big-wigs paraded to a projection room where they gravely okayed the shortie. Next week it'll be shown in a suburban theater—the first "sneak" preview of a trailer. If the audience likes it, the mighty two-minuter will be unleashed on the Nation.

Grid Steered Calhern to Stage

IF Louis Calhern had not been a football player, he might never have become an actor. Starred in the forthcoming Ferenc Molnar comedy, "The Play's the Thing," coming to the National Theater for two weeks beginning Monday, April 12. Calhern traded the cleated brogues and leather helmet of a gridiron warrior for the spear and shield of a Shakespearean super.

The change of battle attire was made through the offices of an advance agent of a Shakespearean repertory company. The agent hired an entire high school football team, including the stalwart Calhern, on the theory that the players' well-muscled torsos would look well in doublet and hose.

The young Calhern decided Elizabethan garb became him so well that, a few months later, he quit school and went to New York to seek his fortune as an actor. He took a room in a boarding house on West 47th st. for $4.74 a week and set out to look for a job. When his sinking fund of $100 had dwindled to three singles, he was hired by a Harlem stock company to play a copy boy in a newspaper drama called "The Fourth Estate." His salary was $9 a week, whenever he could collect it.

After playing in stock, vaudeville, burlesque and carnivals for several years, Calhern left show business to go overseas with a field artillery battalion during World War I. Afterward he won acknowledgement on Broadway through a fine performance in George M. Cohan's "The Song and Dance Man." Top roles followed in "Cobra," "The Woman Disputed," "The Love Duel" and "Brief Moment."

Calhern's growing reputation on Broadway interested the movie companies, which lured him to Hollywood. There the directors turned him into one of the blackest of film villains. It got so bad that producers refused to think of him for sympathetic roles.

Finally Oscar Serlin cast him as the apoplectic Father Day in "Life with Father," a role he played for three years.

Calhern scored again on Broadway as the Colonel in "Jacobowsky and the Colonel" and won four awards for his distinguished performance as Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes in "The Magnificent Yankee."

Now Calhern has an entirely different type of role in Sandor Turai in "The Play's the Thing." His part is a highly sophisticated one, a man of the world playwright who solves the love problem of a beautiful prima donna, played by film star Faye Emerson.

Warners Sign Farrar

David Farrar, British actor, has been signed by Jack L. Warner, executive producer, to appear opposite Bette Davis in Warner Bros.' cinematic version of Edith Wharton's novel, "Ethan Frome."

This will be the first American picture for Farrar, who has been seen in this country in the British films, "Frieda" and "Black Narcissus."

Henry Blanks will produce "Ethan Frome," slated as Miss Davis' next starring vehicle "June Bride."

Director Uses Twins To Beat Age Law

Hollywood, April 3 (AP).—Children's working hours in film studios are limited by law according to age, a situation which almost always presents problems when juveniles appear in pictures.

Director William Seiter managed to maintain continuous production under these circumstances by using 10 sets of twins in filming "Up in Central Park." He divided them in two groups, separating the twins. When the first group reached its legal limit in time worked, he switched to the other group.

Steve Brodie Cast

Steve Brodie, Tony Barrett and Robert Bray are latest additions to the cast of RKO Radio's Tim Holt-vehicle, "Guns of Wrath." It is being directed by Lesley Selander at Lone Pine, Calif.

Rudolf Serkin Playing Here Thursday Evening

BALOGH EDDY SERKIN

THE week includes Rudolf Serkin in solo recital for the first time in Constitution Hall, and playing all 24 of the Chopin Preludes; Nelson Eddy's long-awaited visit; Igor Stravinsky leading the National Symphony in its final concert of the season; and two performances today of the Bach-Busoni Chaconne.

It's a pity that two such artists of the piano as Serkin and Erno Balogh must play on the same evening. Balogh, artist teacher at Peabody, is playing a fine program in Alexandria Thursday, while Serkin rules Constitution Hall. They're both good.

The United States Naval Academy Chapel Choir will join with the choir of Washington Cathedral at the 4 o'clock service today, in singing Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." The Annapolis men will also sing three anthems during the evensong service, drawing upon music by Bach, Lotti and Noble.

The United States Marine Band Orchestra's program Wednesday evening is to be an all-request program, chosen from the music most often requested by members of the orchestra's audience; 8:15 in the Marine Barracks Band Auditorium.

MARCH issue of Notes, musical quarterly issued by the Library of Congress Music Division as a publication of Music Librarians Association, is an even better issue than December's. Record reviews, information about newly published music, and a variety of widely ranging articles make it a handy and valuable magazine to have around.

The Inka Taky Trio of Peru is to appear at the Pan American dinner, April 13, at the Mayflower. Their singing and dancing at the Pan Am Building two years ago started high powered comments about their brilliance.

Columbia Light Opera announces "Carmen" performances for Friday and Saturday, April 23 and 24, Roosevelt Auditorium, with guests from New York singing Carmen and Don Jose, and local artists providing the balance. P.H.

Two-Year Mozart Plan Envisions 32 Concerts

NEW YORK, April 3 (U.P.).—A "two-year" plan of 32 chamber music concerts in Town Hall, New York, has been announced by the New Friends of Music.

The idea is to introduce many of Mozart's rarely heard serenades and divertimenti for unusual combinations of wind instruments and strings, in addition to string quartets and quintets and chamber works with piano. The programs will be supplemented with chamber works of Bach, Brahms and the contemporary composers Arnold Schoenberg and Paul Hindemith.

The two-year cycle, extending through to early 1950, will begin next October 31.

Ensembles to appear on the programs include the Budapest, Busch, Guilet, Roth, Juillard, Paganini, Pro Arte, Galimir and Hungarian Quartets; Robert Shaw's Collegiate Chorale, and the Albeniri, Pasquier and Busch-Serkin Trios.

Among the individual artists are Adolf Busch, Joseph Szigeti, Hortense Monath, Rudolf Serkin, Leonard Rose, Lotte Lehmann, Jennie Tourel, M. Horszowski, Milton Katims, Nikita Magaloff, Robert Bloom, Rudolf Firkusny, John Wummer, Jascha Veissi, Edith Harris, Alice Howland, Erich Itor Kahn, Ignace Strasfogel, Louise Bernhardt, Fritz Stiedry, Erika von Wagner, Joseph and Lilian Fuchs, and others.

THE Esco Foundation for Palestine composition scholarship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., has been awarded to 29-year-old Herbert Bruen of Tel-Aviv by the American judges, Leonard Bernstein, Henry Cowell, Ethel S. Cohen, Frederick Jacobi, Wallingford Riegger, and Stefan Wolpe.

The scholarship includes transportation to and from Palestine and the Berkshire Music Center, room and board during the six-weeks' session, tuition cost for the postgraduate course in competition, and admittance to all concerts, lectures and general activities at the center.

The 25th anniversary of Fabien Sevitzky's arrival in the United States found him in Olean, N. Y., conducting a concert by the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, which he heads. The mayor of Olean presented Dr. Sevitzky with a key to the city and he was guest of honor at a reception after the concert. The Russian-born conductor became an American citizen in 1928.

Fortune Gallo's San Carlo Opera Company will begin a two-week engagement at the Center Theater in Rockefeller Center on April 14, ending its 37th annual Nationwide tour. This will be the company's 11th consecutive season at the Center Theater.

Niven Says It Isn't So

Hollywood, April 3 (AP).—Jane Wyman and David Niven knew each other only by reputation until they met formally on the set of "A Kiss in the Dark."

The pleasantries of introduction disposed of, they went into their first scene. Miss Wyman's initial words in the script:

"You stinker! You heel!"

Afterward, Niven sent her flowers, and a note reading, "Please don't believe the script. I'm really not such a bad [illegible]

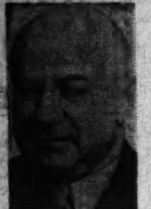
Elman Falls A Bit Short On Concerto

MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto. Mischa Elman, violinist, with Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Desire Defauw. Victor 1196. $6.



ELMAN

Szigeti and Beecham still are unrivaled in the field of recordings of this concerto. Victor's present set finds Elman laying on with that plushy tone of his and slowing down phrase after phrase for the sake of tonal effect. Mendelssohn can stand almost any kind of performance better than one which emphasizes the over-romantic aspects of his sameness in writing.

Elman errs also in pitch, and his playing is strangely out of the grand manner to which he has so long been devoted. This set, with the lackadaisical work of Defauw running the orchestra, commends itself not a particle.

Saint-Saens: The Spinning Wheel of Omphale. Royal Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham. Victor 12-0152. $1.25.

As a child we used to hear this tone poem every season during the children's concerts of the Chicago Symphony. Then it seemed a wonderful piece of picture painting in sound. Now its obvious mechanics are perhaps too familiar. At any rate, even a fine performance by Beecham and his new orchestra fails to convince us. Nevertheless it is a first-class piece of playing.

Brahms: Sonata in D minor for violin and piano. Isaac Stern, violinist, with Alexander Zakin, pianist. Columbia 730. $4.60.

Previous outstanding recordings of this sonata have been offered by Szigeti and Petri, and by Paul Kochanski and Artur Rubinstein. We never felt happy about the Szigeti-Petri set, although it amazes that this is so.

At any rate, the Kochanski-Rubinstein set has always been our idea of a towering reading of one of the great chamber sonatas. Dramatic in the extreme, sweeping through the scherzo, tender in the slow section, it was, and remains one of our favorite albums. Stern and Zakin are not the equals of the two older men, of whom Kochanski is no longer living. But there is much to admire in the new set. The tempo of the slow movement is excellent. There is good drive in the opening measures. The chief difficulty seems to lie in a lack of sustained breadth in the first and last sections. This is, however, a fine recording of some beautiful playing. The other albums are no longer easily available, and this is a reasonable successor.

MENOTTI: The Medium; and the Telephone. Original Broadway casts of these operas which have been, and continue, so successful. (The shows are now on the road, and may get to Washington this spring.) Columbia 726. $14.20.

Columbia, fully awake to its responsibilities and opportunities in the realm of new works, has recorded the entire production of these two operas, save for one lamentable feature. In the Medium, with its ascending mood of tragedy, they omit the sound effects which add so much to the stage production. Thus when Toby, the mute in the Medium, moves about the stage, we should hear his shuffle, as we did when the two operas were broadcast.

The sound of doorbells, knocks on the door, and mysterious rappings in general, are easy to put on records, and it is a shame that they were omitted from this set, right up until the last side. There suddenly we hear a knock, and the other sounds that make blood run cold at the right times.

Aside from that point, the records are wonderful. Engineering is fine, orchestral and solo balance very good, and the performance all you expect of a company which has been working together for months. The Medium is a powerful story of seances, faked voices, and what have you. The Telephone is sheer delight from beginning to end as poor Ben tries to propose, only to be interrupted at every crucial moment by the telephone. Three cheers for Columbia and the great job they have done in giving us these two interesting pieces of theater music. P. H.

Taking Pictures

There's a Code of Manners, Even for Amateur Photogs

By Ollie Atkins

How to shoot, in one easy lesson: Here's Al Muto of International News Photos making with the wigwag as he directs a subject. At right is Mrs. Mary Brown, 4683 Homer ave., Suitland Manor, who was judged best-dressed matron in the Easter Parade last weekend

GOOD manners can be employed in making pictures and this column is pointed at amateur photographers who imitate press photographers in public places during news events.

Since you are not news photographers, it might be a good idea not to walk through police lines or in front of other spectators. Possession of a camera does not entitle you to shove people around as you forge to the front row, nor does the camera, for that matter, reserve you a spot in that first line.

At last year's Cherry Blossom Festival some 50 pseudo newshounds dashed around the stage until the police were forced to take a hand, so the show could continue. This sometimes makes professional photographers look foolish in the eyes of thousands of spectators.

At the Easter parade on Connecticut ave. I heard a captain of police almost pleading with amateur shutterbugs to step back off the street. No one moved. Finally the officer just gave up—he was too polite to push the citizens around.

The passes many amateurs carry are not recognized by police. Under the strict auspices of the White House News Photographers' Association, Major Barrett, Commissioner Young and Captain Raspberry have issued special press police passes which are the only ones recognized by all Washington police.

So don't push around in crowds, don't walk in front of cameras and don't stand in front of spectators. If you are a gentleman, act like one when you use that camera.

THIS week I had a chance to inspect Harry Frohman's new Washington Institute of Photography, which is ready to accommodate some 30 students in both day and night classes. Instruction will be aimed toward making studio photographers with about a year's practical training. GI rights will probably be available after Frohman begins instruction.

Ansco color film in 35-mm. Leica-type cartridges has been taken off allocation lists and is available to dealers in lots generally sufficient to meet ordinary demands.

Announcement is made of the sixth annual Piedmont Salon of Photography, sponsored by the Piedmont Festival, Inc., and the Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce, Winston-Salem, N. C., May 9 to 16.

All amateur and professional photographers in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia and past residents of those States are eligible. Entry blanks may be secured from Ed. Simons, 412 W. 4th st., Winston-Salem, N. C.

Did you make any pictures of the cherry blossoms out Bethesda way? Your snapshots may be worth prizes in a contest sponsored by the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce.

All photographers are eligible. Pictures must have been made in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase-Kenwood area this season and submitted to the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce, 7240 Wisconsin ave., not later than May 29. Awards will be made at the chamber's meeting, June 7. All prints must be mounted with name and address of contestant and class of picture on back of mount. Contestants may submit two photos in each class.

Briefly, classifications are as follows: Cherry blossoms on business street, color print in residential area, black and white print in residential area, children's photos, limited to those under 16. For additional information call Vicar Photo Service, 7510 Wisconsin ave., Bethesda, Md., WI. 9566.

IgorStravinsky Appears Today With Symphon

TIME has been an important factor in resolving many of the conflicts. For in time every composer of today whose music faces forward owes a debt of varying degree to the music of Igor Stravinsky. Walter Piston, recently named Naumburg professor in music at Harvard University, says in Dance Index, "Few present-day composers can safely disclaim the influence of Igor Stravinsky upon their development, and few would wish to." Piston continues, "He (Stravinsky) has recreated, revalued and refreshed all branches of the art—harmony, melody, rhythm, form, color, orchestration—and in the process he has given us a store of significant, inspiring and lasting works."

Stravinsky's influence is even more dramatically set forth by Virgil Thomson in an article of February 13, 1947, reprinted in his recently published collection of reviews, "The Art of Judging Music" (Alfred A. Knopf, $4.25). Thomson says, "Stravinsky's Rite of Spring . . . is probably the most influential work of music composed in our century and the most impressive in performance."

Unqualified praise of Stravinsky's genius comes from France's leading musician today, Darius Milhaud, who believes that "the great privilege of musicans now in their 50's is to have witnessed at first hand all the works of Stravinsky as he produced them."

Harvard Lectures

THE GERM OF Stravinsky's own musical and philosophical creed can be discovered from repeated readings of a series of lectures which he delivered at Harvard University in 1939-40 as the Charles Eliot Norton lectures for that year. These lectures illuminate the thinking behind Stravinsky's writing; they make clear many of the reasons for his music sounding as it does. They also show Stravinsky's insistence upon order to be as strong in letters as in the more accustomed realm of sound.

Concerning the precise act of creating new music, Stravinsky says, "I have no thought of denying to inspiration the outstanding role that has devolved upon it in the generative process we are studying; I simply maintain that inspiration is in no way a prescribed condition of the creative act, but rather a manifestation that is chronologically secondary." He amplifies the subject by stating that for him the matter of putting in order musical elements that have attracted his attention is a regular, habitual affair, as one might satisfy hunger.

Those who go to Constitution Hall this afternoon at 4 will hear not only the familiar richness of Firebird, which was startling new to 1910 audiences, but has now become a popular favorite; they will also hear a Divertimento, a loosely connected series of related dance forms long attractive to Stravinsky's genius; there will be the ballet scenes, written upon commission from Billy Rose in 1944, and the symphony in three movements, dating from 1946.

Continuing Genius

FROM time to time, voices have arisen to shout that Stravinsky wrote his greatest, some even say his only music, in the early romantic ballets, Firebird, Petrouchka, and so on. One of many possible arguments against this view comes from Aaron Copland, who says of the symphony in three movements, "the organization of musical materials in the first movement opens new paths into the little explored region of musical coherence."

Washington has good cause to know other evidences of Stravinsky's continuing genius. His Dumbarton Oaks concerto was commissioned by Robert Woods Bliss and Mrs. Bliss and named for their beautiful estate, now Harvard University's Research center, in Washington, home of the renowned Byzantine museum. Washington was the place where Stravinsky's classic ballet, "Apollon Musagete," had its world premiere just 20 years ago, when Hans Kindler directed the work at the Library of Congress. That ballet is being staged this month in New York by Ballet Theater, along with the composer's newest work, a ballet on the Orpheus legend.

Washington Cathedral was the scene of the first local performance of another of Stravinsky's greatest works, the Symphony of Psalms, presented there last December by the Cathedral Choral Society under Paul Callaway, with members of the National Symphony.

Firm's 'FIB' Tracks Owners Of Unidentified Camera Film

THANKS to an organization which combines the talent of Sherlock Holmes with the patience of Job, thousands of feet of motion picture film and tens of thousands of color transparencies have been restored to their rightful owners during the past year.

The Eastman Kodak Co.'s F.I.B., or Film Identification Bureau, is a seven-man sleuthing section which traces the owners of unidentified films sent to the company's processing stations. The F.I.B. solved more than 7500 "cases" in 1947.

Most of these cases arose from the failure of picture-takers to include a correct and complete return address with films sent in for processing. Sometimes a postal cancellation blacks out part of the return address; sometimes the film is separated from its container in the mail; sometimes the address with the film is illegible.

But most of F.I.B.'s common complaints are those caused by carelessness. Either no return address is given or a street address may be lacking, the name of a city or town forgotten, the name of the state omitted.

Any one of these errors of omission makes it impossible to return—or would, if the word "impossible" were in the F.I.B.'s language.

Stock in Trade

BUT doing the impossible is the stock in trade of the F.I.B. This may involve sending 22 letters to as many towns named Oxford when the name of the State is omitted. It may involve checking business, professional, city, and telephone directories. It may call for correspondence with the Army or Navy to locate the home address of a former serviceman. Or it may call for viewing the films themselves for a clue to the owner.

All of these methods yield results. One of the 22 letters, for instance, will reach the sender of the film. Doctors frequently may be traced through the professional directory which the American Medical Association publishes. Both the Army and Navy stand ready to help locate a veteran whose overseas postoffice has long ago been disbanded.

And, in the films themselves, the F.I.B. may turn up shots which show the name of a cruise ship, the sign of a business establishment, the license plate of an automobile; the latter, which leads to the owner of the car, is a surefire bet. Experience has shown that in shots of this type the owner of the film and the owner of the car are almost always one.

Large File Kept

TO expedite this business of tracing film the F.I.B. maintains a large file in which unidentified films are listed by the name of the sender — when known—or by the subject matter. As a result, if John Doe complains that he sent in some film for processing and has received no transparencies back, his name is checked against the name file in the F. I. B. records. If this draws a blank, he is questioned about the subject matter of the film. With this information, the subject files are combed, and chances are the film is found.

Almost all of this work however, could be eliminated if picture takers would do just three simple things, F.I.B. experts say. First, print in ink their name and return address on the containers in which they ship their film. Second, check their address to see they've included the street and number, city and postal zone, and the full name of the state. And third, make certain that their film is secure in the container. With movie film, care should be taken to tie the carton with string.

These suggestions, of course, won't help out in such cases as one the bureau worked on last summer. For two months it tried to locate transparencies for a frantic feminine correspondent. And with little success. Finally, though, the case was solved. The husband of the woman had been carrying the pictures in his Mackintosh pocket; he had put them there on a late spring day and hadn't worn his mackintosh during warm weather.

But, in hundreds of other cases, a little care ends the danger of lost film. It also ends the delays in tracing films. Where the F.I.B. is concerned, its business is best when its business is least.

The Aces're Back, And Thank Heaven

GOODMAN ACE AND JANE
. . . good for the U. S. Army

so skillfully as Jane. In fact, many of Jane's expressions are great improvements on the originals. "He shot out of here like a bat out of a belfry," "The coffee will be ready in a jitney," "I'm really in a quarry," "this hangnail expression," "the crank of dawn"—those are a few of her improvements.

She's Never Even

IN MOST other respects, Jane is a rather difficult conversationalist because she is either three jumps ahead or three long strides behind whomever she is conversing with.

"Hi, Jane," an acquaintance will call out. "What have you been doing?"

"Just fine, thanks," says Jane.

Goodman Ace, the brains of this team, tags along behind his wife, acting as narrator for her mishaps in a dry, resigned voice (one of the few really intelligent voices on the air) and interjecting witty comment. The couple's conversations are usually masterpieces of cross-purpose.

"Dear, I've just done the most terrible thing I've ever done in all the years we've been married and seven months," his wife is likely to tell him. "I was talked into it by some one I should have known better. In other words yes."

While most of the action revolves around the scrapes Jane gets into, Ace, who writes the scripts, uses his program to take a few pokes at radio, the newspapers and the world in general. He's particularly sharp on the subject of radio, a field he knows intimately.

There's also an announcer named Ken Roberts whose function is to kid all the commercials on the air. Here's a sample of a Roberts commercial: "Fifty years ago Blycose began selling the public its high-quality products and today, just as it was 50 years ago, it is March 27."

The real sponsor for the Ace show is the United States Army recruiting service, and after President Truman's message to Congress urging re-enactment of the draft, Ace remarked blithely that he was the only comedian in radio for whom the President did the commercials.

Platter Pilots of Radio Unite to Improve Ethics

STANDARD-BEARERS: Fred Robbins, left, New York chairman of the National Association of Disc Jockeys, discusses plans with Andre Baruch and Bea Wain, a disc jockey team

By Saul Pett

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP).—Four disc jockeys, up at the crack of noon, sat in an idle radio studio explaining the new National Association of Disc Jockeys.

"We'll fight payola," said Tommy Dorsey. Freddie Robbins, chairman of NADJ's national board of directors nodded. So did Andre Baruch and his wife, Bea Wain.

"What's payola?" a reporter asked.

"A disc jockey writes a song," Dorsey began. "He pressures a recording company into recording it. Otherwise, he doesn't play their records. Or a jock tells a band leader, 'for so-much-and-so-much I'll air your platters—otherwise, no soap.' That's payola."

"Of course," Dorsey added, "most of the country's 3000-plus jocks don't do this."

"We're going to outlaw this kind of thing," said Robbins. "Any member who violates the code gets bounced from the association."

"Ditto bad taste on the air," said Bea Wain.

"You've got to remember," Baruch said, "that we jockeys take up more air time than any other single group. We've got to have standards, especially because of the thousands of kids who listen.

"Also, we ought to rule out insulting the performers who make the records. I don't think it's smart for a guy to play a platter on the air and then break it." This from Dorsey, a band leader and not a critic.

"But if you know something about music, criticism lends balance." This from Baruch, a critic and not a band leader.

"We have to make the industry respected," Robbins observed.

At this point he launched into a history of NADJ.

Last August a movie company which had made a film about a disc jockey, invited 200 or 300 real turntable artists to Chicago, as a publicity stunt. Once together on someone else's expense account, the boys decided to form the real thing.

A membership drive was launched to recruit the 3000 to 4000 jockeys around the country. Thus far, NADJ has about 300 members, with incomes of from $35 to $3500 and reputations ranging from obscurity to the fame of Dorsey, Paul Whiteman and Duke Ellington. Barry Gray of Miami Beach is national president; Hugh Douglas, Chicago, vice chairman, and Bill Leyden, Los Angeles, secretary.

NADJ's first project will be scholarships for amateur singers, instrumentalists and arrangers. The amateurs will be picked on a regional basis and then will compete nationally. The winners will receive a scholarshp to a music school or a year's contract with a recording company.

To finance such philanthropy, the organization put on a five-hour, big-name show in New York late in January.

"You've got to understand this," said Baruch. "We're not a labor organization. We're not political. We're not fighting the Petrillo ban (on musical recordings) nor are we supporting it."

1948 a Year for Television?

Television industry leaders believe 1948 is the year during which the country will really become television conscious. They estimate that some 75 stations will be on the air by late 1948 or early 1949—and that 750,000 or more sets will reach the public next year compared with 175,000 this year.

Sales Plan:

Every Room Should Have Its Own Radio

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP).—An intensive radio sales campaign appears to be in the works for the American public.

The Radio Manufacturers Association has tabulated the results of a test of the proposed campaign conducted in Hartford, Conn.

Hartford residents were told in newspaper ads, on the air, and by salesmen of the advantages of having a radio for every member of the family—or for every room in the house.

The result, the RMA says, was that radio sales in Hartford during the campaign were two and one-half times those in Providence, R. I. Providence was chosen for comparison because of its close parallel to Hartford in population, market area and other characteristics.

The prewar idea of radio was a set in every home. Now that more than 90 per cent of American homes have radios, manufacturers and dealers look to the radio-in-every-room idea to provide new markets.

One of their arguments is that with a set in every room, you don't have to miss your favorite program because you are in the kitchen, dining room or some other part of the house when it's on. And they contend it's a good way to avoid family arguments over which program should be tuned in at a certain time—each member of the family can listen to what he wants to, when he wants to.

Trade circles expect 1948 television production to be boosted by the deal announced recently between Dumont Laboratories, Inc., of Clifton, N. J., and the Avco Manufacturing Co., Crosley Division in Cincinnati.

It's understood the agreement calls for Crosley to use its mass production facilities in turning out sets of Dumont design with 12-inch picture tubes for marketing by both firms. Dumont has one table model with 12-inch picture tube but specializes on sets with larger screens. Crosley already is producing two television sets of its own design, both with 10-inch picture tubes.

Conflicting opinions on television's effect on sound broadcasting were expressed here by industry officials on succeeding days.

Frank Stanton, president of the CBS radio network which plans to extend its television network on a Nation-wide scale, said he didn't think television ever would replace sound broadcasting completely.

Ernest A. Marx, general manager of the television receiver division of Dumont, predicted that within three years "the radio industry will have suffered a very severe decline, and in its place television will have taken over."

There seems to be no pessimism among sound broadcasters about the feature of their medium. The number of authorized standard radio stations has more than doubled since the war and FM stations are going on the air at a fast pace.

ABC says an audience survey on one of its programs indicates one person out of every five enters an advertising contest at one time or another. And of these, one out of five wins a prize.

WESTINGHOUSE President Gwilym A. Price says his company still has great faith in stratovision—the use of high-flying planes to bounce television signals back to earth and spread them over wide areas. After a directors' meeting here recently, Price said a new appropriation had been set aside for the stratovision experiment being made jointly with the Glenn L. Martin Co.

500 British Actors Thrown Out of Films

LONDON, April 3 (AP).—The Film Casting Association, the British movie industry's central employment agency for extras, said it would release more than 500 actors and actresses for lack of sufficient work.

The Ministry of Labor had ruled the association had too many names on its books for available jobs. Those dismissed will be directed into other work by the ministry.

Between 1600 and 1800 extras will still be registered with the association.

Nets to Double Programs for Daylight Time

NEW YORK, April 3 (AP).—NBC and CBS have begun informing affiliated stations that they intend as previously indicated, to join other networks in double time program operation when daylight saving time begins April 25. This is the scheme that enables programs to remain at the same clock times no matter whether daylight or standard.

The plan, originated by ABC, provides for a "live" transmission first to all stations on daylight time. Then by means of recordings there is a repeat relay an hour later to the stations which adhere to standard time.

MBS, which used the plane for only part of its schedule last year, is arranging to extend it to the full list.

The overall effect of the uniform operation will be to eliminate the confusion of last season, when NBC and CBS had a straight daylight schedule and the other two networks followed the double time in whole or in part.

Folk Dancers Here for 2 Days

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

Students at Cheyenne Mountain School romp through a cowboy dance. They will present a program of early American and cowboy dances at McKinley High School and Banneker Junior High School this week

THE "dean" of the square and the folk dance, Dr. Lloyd Shaw, will bring his fast-stepping Cheyenne Mountain dancers to Washington this week.

The group will present two concerts of early American and cowboy dances Tuesday at 2:30 and 8 p. m. at McKinley High School; another Wednesday at 2:30 p. m. at Banneker Junior High.

The concerts are sponsored by seven local education and teacher associations. Tickets at 40 cents for the afternoon performances and $1.20 for the evening show are on sale at the schools or at the District Recreation Department, 16th and Lamont sts. nw.

Dr. Shaw, considered the Nation's foremost caller, is the author of two books on the dance, "Cowboy Dances" and "Oldtime Round Dances." He has recorded several square dance albums and was dance director and caller for the movie "Duel in the Sun."

The dancers he brings to Washington are students at Cheyenne Mountain School in Colorado Springs, the high school he has served as superintendent for more than a quarter of a century. Each year he takes a group on tour of major cities.

Primarily an educator, Dr. Shaw, now 57 years old, became interested in dance as a social adjunct to the school's athletic program.

He started with European folk dances and when he branched out to native American dances, dancing became his hobby. He has covered the country digging up dance lore and obscure rounds.

He once estimated that he knows and can call 90 different squares, 60 European folk dances, 10 Mexican, and 30 early American.

Frankie Carle Due May 2 to Replace Spitalny's Girls

New York, April 3 (AP).—One of the spring offerings for CBS listening will be Frankie Carle and his orchestra, who will replace the Phil Spitalny girls on May 2 for the summer.

The Burl Ives song show on MBS Friday nights, run by the same sponsor who puts on Bing Crosby via ABC, will take a long vacation after the April 19 broadcast.

Baltimore has now joined the cities with more than one television station. Opening of WBAL-TV gave it two, with a third, WAAM, expected to come on in June. The city's first station was WMAR.

WBAL-TV has become a part of the NBC picture network, while WMAR has relayed programs from CBS and Dumont.

Story to Order, NBC Sunday morning kiddies' broadcast, has started its fourth year. This is the program in which the originator, Lydia Perera, turns unrelated suggestions from young listeners into radio drama.

Young Radio Fans Still Like Their Whodunits With Punch

ON A strictly "I don't know what's good for me but I know what I like" basis, 300 boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 18 have reported their reactions to radio mystery stories. The results, released recently by the Metropolital Youth Survey Company, a Junior Achievement group of 18 young people, will probably surprise no one, let alone a child psychologist.

Suspense, adventure and blood-and-thunder—in that order — ranked highest with the teen-agers interviewed. After that—in descending order—they preferred helpful information, narration, humor, romance and, a mere 6.4 per cent confessed, "cheap language." The last was undefined.

The survey, impressively labeled "Listening Habits of Metropolitan Youth on Mystery Programs," was undertaken on behalf of the Mutual Broadcasting System's "House of Mystery," a half-hour program broadcast on Sunday afternoons. The interviews for the first part, concerning mysteries in general, were held in mid-December with public and private school students providing the answer.

The results, the "House of Mystery" sponsors proudly announce, parallel those reported by Dr. Robert L. Thorndyke, of the Department of Educational Psychology, Teachers College, Columbia University. His study, made in 1941, was used as a basis for the program's format. The sponsors further rated "House of Mystery" twelfth in a field of 29 programs listed as their favorites.

Of 278 boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 18 88.5 per cent said they listened to mystery programs. Of these, 56.8 per cent listened frequently to at least every alternate broadcast of their favorite shows while 43.2 per cent listened occasionally, tuning in on every third or fourth broadcast. Ninety-one young people had no favorite program; 194, among them 111 girls, had.

With a "just between us kids" attitude, 13 girls and one boy admitted that their parents objected to their listening to mystery programs. But asked next, "Do you listen anyway?" they unanimously answered "yes."

The young people came all-out for a happy ending, although their preferred means toward this end varied. Of 275, 28 per cent wanted the criminal or villain reformed, while 20.7 per cent thought he or she should be punished. More specifically 12.7 per cent declared that the wrong-doer should die. An intellectual 20.7 per cent felt that the audience should draw its own conclusions as to the bad one's fate while 17.8 per cent of the youngsters preferred that some miracle or phenomenon of nature be revealed as the source of the mystery.

At present the young pundits of M. Y. S. C. are pondering part two of the questionnaire, relating specifically to the "House of Mystery" program.

World Unity Taught at Sweet Briar

—By Fred M. Hechinger

SWEET BRIAR, VA., April 3.—"It's just a college," the conductor explained as the train came to a reluctant halt. Technically he was right; but the spirit of his information was all wrong.

Sweet Briar isn't "just a college." That description means almost as little as the fact that its grounds cover 3000 acres and include a dairy farm, riding stables, private lake and boathouse and the loveliest boxwood this side of the Forest of Arden.

Sweet Briar has set itself the goal of arousing "the realization of the individual's place in society, and of the responsibilities and blessings of citizenship, national and world-wide." A student discussion showed the 450 girls advancing toward that goal. In this world of narrowing commercialism, they put cultural education above specialized training; in a sadly imperfect society, they accepted the fight against prejudice; in a civilization of violent friction, they took up the challenge to spread international understanding.

Not Just Youth

THIS is not just youthful enthusiasm. It is the result of a carefully planned curriculum, a world-conscious faculty, and a mature student government. There may be disadvantages in the absence of a town, but at the same time Sweet Briar found it easier to shake off the strings of provincialism.

Under a flexible group plan every girl completes minimum requirements of English, a foreign language, one science, one social science and one of the fine arts. Unless she selects Latin or Greek, she must attend "Classical Civilization," designed to provide the background without which the problems of our times cannot be understood.

"Int[illegible] History" is required. A faculty [illegible] cooperates in providing expert instruction, and I was neither surprised nor disappointed to find one of the college's natural scientists "guest-lecturing" on the theory of evolution to a social studies class.

'Heart and Mind'

LEARNING can too easily be dehydrated by theory. Dr. Martha B. Lucas, Sweet Briar's young and charming president, forcefully guides the curriculum around such pitfalls. "Heart and mind must be educated," she says. "We must be 'led out' into maturity in human relations. Pessimists insist 'you can't change human nature; mankind is doomed.' But changing human nature is just what liberal education is all about."

To free narrow minds "from their bondage to the past," Sweet Briar entered into active participation in world affairs. Instructors from many European countries have joined their colleagues from all parts of the United States in teaching students from nearly 40 States.

The girls have taken to the idea. In a course on totalitarian governments, they asked Prof. Gerhard Masur, formerly of the University of Berlin, to explain the tragedy of Czechoslovakia. After an hour's brilliant commentary, textbook and past came alive and the future assumed new perspective.

Nor is the students' world consciousness purely academic. Through their self-government they have set up an effective relief committee. A damaged school near Paris has been "adopted;" individual students pledged material support to needy Europeans; a "Food for Thought" campaign collected educational supplies for abroad. Last year's drive netted more than $6000.

Dean Mary Ely Lyman had pointed out that most of the girls come from "sheltered" homes. "We want the college to meet changing world conditions," she said. "We want to instill in our girls the knowledge that with every privilege comes responsibility."

Year in France

EARLY this year Sweet Briar took the lead in a Nationwide scheme. Under the college's auspices, 50 students from all qualified American institutions will spend their junior year at the University of Paris and receive full credit upon their return.

Dr. Joseph E. Barker, Sweet Briar's Romance Language head and chairman of the project, will make certain that the venture won't turn into another American colony. He is selecting courses which have not been "Americanized" by G.I.s and he will appoint special French tutors to temper European freedom with Anglo-Saxon guidance.

More than 200 inquiries have been received from every section of the United States. "If we can make "Junior Year in France" a real success, we'll go into similar ventures in as many countries as possible," Dr. Barker said, "Evetually the Far East may be included."

President Lucas recalls her own student days in Europe before World War II. "As all of us studied and thought together, no one of us failed to find common ground and a community of interest which would have rendered forever impossible our voluntarily resorting to force against each other." Here then is the only long-range hope for peace.

'Frees Our Minds'

TO INCOMING freshmen Miss Lucas explains: Liberal education frees our minds from bondage. Without freedom from emotional salvery and from the tyranny of prejudice we cannot become mature, responsible human beings upon whom our democratic society now depends for its very survival."

The Sweet Briar faculty is the living example of these principles. Side by side with Americans of all traditions and locations live and teach men and women from foreign lands. France, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, England, Italy, Mexico are represented. But most significant is the presence of mathematician Rescislau Iwanowski of Poland who, with his family, came to Swet Briar from a DP camp in Germany.

Before I reluctantly left the campus, I witnessed the annual election of student government. There was more srious interest than in most civic communities. Students are in complete charge of matters affecting their activities. Their own judicial board deals with all violations of rules. Under a revised constitution, the government will soon work through three bodies: faculty, students and joint student-faculty board.

Yale to Offer 'Course' in American Life

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 3.—Understanding and participating in the American way of life will be the central theme of a six-week program to be offered to foreign students this summer at Yale University.

Under the program, 40 male foreign students will be able to take three of four courses in American history, government and politics, economics and contemporary American culture. The courses, all at a graduate level, will begin July 26.

Students will pay a $100 tuition fee, but room and board will be given them free of charge.

The program was devised by Yale faculty and students under Archibald S. Foord, instructor of history; Homer D. Babbidge, Jr., assistant to the director of the student appointment bureau, and Edmund K. Sherrill, graduate secretary of the Yale University Christian Association.

Understanding Needed

OUTLINING the program, Foord said it arose from a realization at Yale that the majority of foreign students studying in the United States have been primarily engaged in technical and scientific work, and have not been introduced to the other aspects of American life.

"The project was also undertaken," Foord said, "in response to Yale undergraduate feeling that American students should do something more to promote international understanding. The undergraduates felt the need for more positive action than is now being taken.

"It is to offer foreign students an opportunity to achieve a grasp of the nature of life and thought in America outside the laboratories that this program has been established," he declared.

Aid Available

STUDENTS will live in Wright Hall on Yale's "Old Campus." Their meals will be served in Corbey Court, a fraternity of the Yale Law School, and the Sterling Memorial Library will be available to them for their work.

Students must have a good working knowledge of English and be capable of work at the graduate level. Although they will be required to have financial resources of their own, up to $1000 in scholarship aid will be available.

Financial support for the program, which will amount to $8500, will come from private contributions. The committee has announced that contributions to the fund should be directed to the treasurer of Yale University.

School Slates Back

Wiesbaden, April 3 (AP). — The school slate is making a strong comeback in Germany to help overcome a chronic shortage of writing paper. The education ministry in the American zone state of Hesse has made available 40,000 slates for pupils who have no paper.

West Coast University Bars Discrimination

Seattle, April 3 (U.P.).—The University of Washington has adopted a code barring new social or fraternal organizations from the campus in certain cases. If their constitutions contain racial or religious membership restrictions, they are forbidden.

Prof. Albert F. Miller, chairman of the faculty committee on student groups, said old groups on the campus with such restrictions in their constitutions will be "encouraged to remove them."

Miller said the code was adopted when it was discovered a dental honorary fraternity seeking university recognition carried racial and religious restrictions in its constitution.

The university will "accept any bona fide student who meets entrance requirements regardless of race, creed or religious beliefs," Miller said.

THE JOURNAL of the National Education Association says that in New York a citizens group urged the employment of 10,000 more teachers, construction of 9000 new classrooms, and "huge quantities of textbooks, supplies, and equipment." Proposed cost, 140 million dollars. How to raise: Increase millage for schools from 6.7 to 12.9.

Carnegie to Offer Printing Courses

Pittsburgh, April 3.—After a lapse of several years, the Carnegie Institute of Technology will again offer a special program of printing courses during the summer of 1948.

The six-week session, which will include subjects for beginners as well as experienced craftsmen in the industry, will run from July 6 through August 14.

A tentative listing of courses includes typography, machine composition, layout and design, plant management, estimating and cost findings, press work and photo-lithography.

The Bridge Table

Auxiliary Advances Benefit to April 10

By Marian H. Barre

NOT "just another game" but a gala event is on the cards Wednesday, when the Washington Bridge League meets in its new quarters for the first time at Hotel Roosevelt, 16th st. and Florida ave. nw., play beginning at 8:15 p. m. in the Blue Room. There will be master point awards in the team section, with another section for members who prefer to play in twosomes.

Like the "new look" in fashions, the Blue Room is a bit formal, thus providing the proper setting for a 1948 game. It also is large enough to accommodate an increasing membership. The coming city championships will be played there on May 8 and 9. President W. H. Gorton and Tourney Chairman C. C. Johnson urge all members to attend this housewarming at the Roosevelt.

The women's auxiliary will step up its monthly open pair benefit game to next Saturday to avoid conflict with the Potomac Valley annual on the 23d, 24th and 25th of this month. Nonmembers may play in the auxiliary match, which starts at 1 p. m. in Euclid Studios, Phone Columbia 7857 for reservations.

New champions of the auxiliary are Mrs. J. A. Dearing and Mrs. Ida Terrant, who captured the Eloise Bennett Trophy on March 27 at Hotel Burlington, top score being 183 points. Just two points behind the new champions came Mrs. Edward Hruby and Mrs. Jean Ellis. Mrs. Bernard Rosson and Mrs. Rose Robins were third. Scores ran close, less than one board separating first place from fifth. Played in a "scramble Mitchell" movement, the game was directed by Mrs. D. E. Stephan. Mrs. H. G. Campbell presided at the business meeting, after which lunch was served.

THIS match was one of a veritable epidemic of club championships held in March. Among those not previously reported were:

Men's pairs at Euclid Studios, won by Dr. A. F. O'Donnell and Bernard Rosson, with Lynn Carrier and Mr. Sieweke second. A first-time annual, it was a one-session on the 27th, with W. S. Benedict directing.

At the National Press Club, the magnificent trophy donated by Jesse Jones for open pair championship was annexed by Mr. and Mrs. David Sentner. Played in two rounds, this match was concluded on March 25.

The Arthur Walker Duplicate Club in Arlington finished its mixed pair event, Mrs. Elizabeth Count and Charles Geier defeating the seasoned partnership of Col. and Mrs. J. A. Geddes. Finals were held March 24.

A feminine foursome, a "mixed" and an all-male team, finished in a three-way tie on March 24 at the Washington Bridge League, shattering a myth about sex superiority. Belt, Hoyle, Hamlin, Young; Boschan, Poissant, Steinberg, Stone; Benedict, Flood, Moore and Reynolds made up these teams, given in the same order.

Pair awards also were equally shared, winners being Mrs. John Coffee-James Sourilas, Mrs. L. L. Gibson-John Fletcher, with seconds going to Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McIntyre, Mrs. Fletcher and James Lazrd.

Master point awards in monthly competition at Arlington Farms Club went to Mrs. Elizabeth Land-Irving Kenison, David Kandel-Charles Geier. There was a second-place tie between Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Seabourne and Lieut. and Mrs. Gary Black, in the north-south position, with Mrs. Evelyn Saperstein and Miss Sylvia Narensky east-west runners-up.

The Walsh Club's master point monthly on March 27 was won by Col. and Mrs. M. J. Haas and Mrs. Hruby and L. Carrier. Mrs. Terrant and Mrs. Seabourne, Kandel and J. A. Seabourne were the understudies.

The Washington Philatelist

Rich Cache of Stamps Found in California

By William M. Stuart

[illegible]G the first day sale, January 24, 1948, at Coloma, [illegible]if., of the 3-cent Gold Discovery commemorative [illegible], it was discovered that 40,000 "Pony Express" stamps were in storage at one of the postoffices in that State. A postal official found this huge stock of stamps and after hasty investigation ordered the stock returned to Washington and destroyed. It had been planned that these stamps be sold and affixed to covers during the California centennial celebration.

Placing a stamp selling for 40 cents on a cachet for a State celebration calling for a 3-cent commemorative would have been a most dangerous proceeding.

The "Pony Express" stamp was issued on April 3, 1940, and at present is quoted as selling for 40 cents unused. Just why this great amount of stock was allowed to remain in a postoffice long after the commemorative had been withdrawn from sale at the Philatelic Agency remains a mystery. The above discovery should suggest that the Postoffice Department check all postoffices concerning the exact stock on hand of all commemorative stamps. No postmaster should be permitted to withhold stamps for future sale.

THE Washington Numismatic Society meets tomorrow evening in the United States National Museum, 10th st. and Constitution ave. The society will observe National Coin Week with exhibitions from April 11 to April 17.

The Pentagon Philatelic Society will hold a banquet April 15 in the officers' lounge, Pentagon Building, at 6 p. m. H. L. Lindquist of New York will be the speaker.

President Truman has ordered a commemorative 3-cent stamp to be issued in honor of the women of America. The first day sale will be held later in the year at Seneca Falls, N. Y., where the first Woman's Rights convention was held.

THE annual sale of unclaimed stamps, covers and coins of the Postoffice Department was held recently in the City Postoffice and $2315.50 was realized. There were 230 lots. Coins went at high prices, the top being $104 for a large lot of currency. Good prices were noted for the stamps and covers, Philippine sheets of various unused issues selling for $5.25, $7.50, $4, $6 and $45. Approval sheets in lots of 20 brought from $8 to $12. Packets in lots of 20 sold for $9 to $15. Three new albums brought $7.50 and other album lots sold for $5.50. Unused sheets of the Roosevelt Memorial issue of Liberia, 32 sheets in all, brought $14 and $15.

Famous American sheets sold for $24, against a face value of $8.97. Lots of United States mixtures of common stamps brought from $6.50 to $15. Lots of 25 souvenir sheets for the 100th anniversary of the 1847 stamp sold for $4 and $5.25. Some 40 covers, first day, of the Alfred E. Smith 3-cent stamp sold for $5.50 and 100 assorted covers brought $10. Five pounds of United States common mixtures sold for $10 to $17. The sale was in charge of C. E. Mace, assistant superintendent of mails in charge of the dead letter division; John Sparkman and Everette Estes were auctioneers.

BEGINNING tomorrow evening, meetings of the Woodridge Stamp Club will be held on the first and third Mondays of each month in the recreation room at 1818 Rhode Island ave. ne.

The annual hobby show of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., was held at Pythian Temple on Tuesday evening. Ellery Denison, president, was master of ceremonies. A new hobby, that of collecting tea bags, was demonstrated by Mrs. Edmond Henderer.

Those participating and their hobbies were as follows: Mrs. Julia Smith, handkerchiefs; Col. M. H. Zwicker, coins; Myron Rullman, comic strips and name cover cancellations; Mr. and Mrs. Henderer, electric trains, buttons, match boxes, dolls; Mrs. John Sirola and Miss Virginia Brown, souvenir picture cards; Miss Ellen Hutchins and Miss Ann Hurst, playing cards, and Ernest and Walter Woodhouse, models of trains and warships. There will be another meeting of the club Tuesday evening at Pythian Temple.

Picnic Kit's Free, Bring Wood

WITHIN the District's big network of parks the Recreation Department maintains 130 picnic areas with fireplaces.

Fifty of these are located in Fort Dupont Park, Alabama and Minnesota aves. se., and 60 in Rock Creek Park.

Permits to use the areas must be obtained from the Recreation Department, 16th and Lamont sts. nw., and you must bring your own firewood.

Last year 8094 permits were issued with 449,000 persons using the facilities.

The department offers special services to large groups including suggestions on organizing programs, menus, songsheets and picnic kits containing athletic equipment.

Last year the 25 picnic kits were used 524 times by 36,125 persons.

In the picnic kits are a volleyball net and ball, horseshoes, rubber quoits, badminton net, racquets and birds, and a soft ball and bat. There is no charge for the kits and they may be taken out for a weekend.

In addition to Fort Dupont and Rock Creek, available picnic areas with fireplaces are:

Barnard Hill, 24th and Randolph sts. ne., four fireplaces; Battery Kember, Chain Bridge rd., two fireplaces; Congress Heights, 7th st. and Alabama ave. se., one fireplace; Fort Bunkerhill Park, 14th and Otis sts. ne., one fireplace; Fort Mahan, 42d st. and Benning rd. ne., two fireplaces; Foundry Park, 44th st. and Reservoir rd. nw., one fireplace; Hearst, 37th and Tilden sts. nw., one fireplace; Langdon, 20th and Franklin sts. ne., one fireplace; Oxon Run, 4th st. and Mississippi ave. se., one fireplace; Palisades, Dana and Sherrier pls. nw., two fireplaces; Rock Creek and Potomac pkwy., two fireplaces; Takoma-Coolidge, 5th and Sheridan sts. nw., two fireplaces.

Design Selected For Duck Stamp

The design selected for the Federal "duck stamp" to be used during the 1948-49 hunting season will feature buffle - head ducks, the Fish and Wildlife Service has announced.

The design for the 1948 - 49 stamp is the work of Maynard Reece of Des Moines, Iowa. The original sketch, a black and white wash drawing, shows two male and one female buffle-head ducks in flight.

Fifteenth in the series, the new migratory bird hunting stamp, generally called "duck stamp," is now on its way to the engravers and will be available to hunters and philatelists at all first and second class post offices July 1.

Sold for $1, the duck stamps provide funds that help finance the Federal Government's wildlife refuge program.

20 Lighted Courts Set Up

Horseshoes, Even as 'Woo', Can Be Pitched at Night

One of D. C.'s major recreational sports, both daylight and dark

HORSESHOE pitching is one of the District's major recreational sports. Twenty courts have been set up at 15th st. and Constitution ave. and are lighted at night.

In the same area south of the Ellipse are two badminton courts, two shuffleboards and a volleyball court.

Permits to use these facilities are obtained from the District Recreation Department, 16th and Lamont sts. nw.

Most of the city's recreational areas have courts for horseshoe pitching during daylight hours. Badminton also is played on an outdoor court at Rock Creek Park playground, 16th and Kennedy sts. nw.

As soon as weather permits, the Recreation Department plans to set up an archery range at Rock Creek playground. Lessons will be available without charge from 6 p. m. to dark on Friday nights.

Eight of the city's recreational areas for Negroes have archery ranges. They are Langston, 24th st. and Benning rd. ne.; Barry Farms, Nichols ave. and Howard and Euclid st. nw.; Randall, 1st rd. se.; Banneker, Georgia ave. and I sts. sw.; Thomas, 7th st. and Kenilworth ter. ne.; Rose Park, 27th and O sts. nw.; Kelley-Miller, 49th st. and Washington pl. ne., and Francis, 24th and N sts. nw.

Shuffleboard, volleyball, handball and paddle tennis courts are located at a majority of the recreational areas.

Sportsmen Plead For Conservation

THERE'S an alarming scarcity of waterfowl and conservation officials and real sportsmen are pleading for conservation of the dwindling supply. But many apparently still don't realize the seriousness of the situation, and are continuing the wasteful slaughter of the birds.

Perhaps the most startling example of this illegal shooting is revealed in the reports of Federal and State game wardens who visited Big Wall Lake public shooting area in Iowa. Federal officers told of finding piles of teal and coot which had been left in the marsh by hunters. In one pile there were 35 coot, and in another 22 teal.

The State officers said a number of ducks had been found unretrieved or abandoned along the shore of the marsh. Hunters apparently had been killing more than the daily limit of birds. They were keeping only the largest and most desirable table ducks and throwing away the coot and teal to rot or be devoured by predators.

Maine Warden Has A Jinx on His Trail

The hard luck jinx seems to be hot on the trail of Clint Barrett, a Maine fish and game warden who received two tough breaks only a few days apart. The first came a week ago. While crossing a beaver flowage on snowshoes, he crashed through the ice into very deep water in sub-zero weather, and barely escaped with his life.

It was a close call. And just a few days later Barrett slipped on the ice while shoveling snow at his home, crashed down on the shovel and smashed three ribs.

A Roller Coaster On the Highway

Shelbyville, Ind., April 3 (AP).—Jeffery Pfaff was driving on a four-lane highway when the steering column broke. He was thrown against the dashboard. The sudden stopping of the car threw a big bucket against his head, nearly knocking him unconscious.

About that time he felt a hard jolt. Finally getting the car stopped he found he was headed the wrong way on the left lane, the left side of his car badly dented. Another automobile, some distance down the highway was wrapped around the tree.

Pfaff's car had sideswiped it, causing it to crash.

The happy ending: No one was injured.

Vermont Uncovers Game Racket

Chief Warden C. J. Dowers of the Vermont Fish and Game Department and his men recently uncovered a vicious racket that was cutting into Vermont's deer supply.

Knowing that Vermont still permits the sale of deer meat, poachers have been cashing in by shooting deer in Vermont along the New Hampshire border and then going into New Hampshire and buying nonresident licenses.

The New Hampshire tags were attached to the Vermont deer so that they could be openly transported for sale in Vermont to Boston venison buyers. Wardens arrested two men in the act of attaching New Hampshire tags to a pair of does and uncovered the racket.

Honest Abe Stirs Parking Troubles

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., April 3 (AP).—The city commission has undertaken to reconcile the operation of parking meters on holidays.

Originally, it was generally understood that parking meters were not operative on holidays. A new ordinance says that the meters needn't be fed coins on holidays—except Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays.

The idea is to head off further misunderstandings such as occurred on Lincoln's birthday. Police issued a batch of tickets that day to motorists who neglected to feed the meters. Then Municipal Judge Walter Conway dismissed all tickets issued that day.

Whistle Stopping

Tourists 'Observe' Ye Travel Reporter

IN MY OFFICIAL capacity as stationary globe-runner, I thought it only meet that, the town being acreep with tourists of all shapes, vintages and conditions, I should brazen forth and talk with some of same. Suiting, to coin a wheeze, the action to the word, I stepped cheerily into Post Square and was promptly knocked flat by a covey of muscular young ladies from Lynchburg.

Nothing daunted, I rose, poked up the crown of my 1941 fedora (late 1941, of course), and approached a comely lass whom I took to be from Laurel, Md., since she had a large LAUREL emblazoned on her jacket. She was exhibiting the New Look, but I favored her with my Old Smirk and the results were the same as they have been for many years. Taking leave of this chill vixen, I put on my Friendly (or Chamber of Commerce type) Smile and walked up to a venerable gentleman assiduously studying a Guide Book to Washington. "Good morning, sir," I said in tones of spring. "It's certainly nice to see all you tourists taking the trouble to visit this our city, our Capital, our Washin—" "The tourists," he interrupted, giving me a harshly critical appraisal which stopped just short of his walking completely around me, "will be richly rewarded if they chance to see YOU." So, I'm back in my chair again and I'll do my globe-running in the usual stationary manner, hereafter.

TRAVEL AGENTS, according to an item which reached this desk not at all by chance, are a great and noble breed. Nothing they wouldn't do for you. "Use an agent," it says in accents lusty. "If you're planning a major trip by air, sea, rail or bus, it's false economy to forego the services of a good travel agent—and that advice comes from the carriers themselves. The travel agent isn't paid by the traveling public directly, that is, but by the carriers, dude ranches, tour organizers, resorts or other concerns the agents may represent. They give the agent a commission on the business he does for them, and to qualify as their representative he must prove his integrity and experience." There's more, but you get the idea. I understand it's counsel of the soundest.

Plane Helps Save Ducks

By Vern Haugland

A LOW-FLYING float plane is curbing the illegal killing of ducks.

Federal game wardens say it has cleaned up a good part of the marshy Eastern Shore of Maryland and Virginia, formerly regarded as "the worst duck trapping area on the continent."

Furthermore, the float plane has brought an end to the old toilet paper technique of marking illegal traps, necessary when land planes were used. Formerly pilots dropped long ribbons of toilet tissue to guide ground crews to the hidden traps.

Traps Destroyed

NOW, says Jesse Thompson, chief of game management for the Fish and Wildlife Service, a game warden lands his amphibian near the wire-mesh traps, jumps out and rips them up.

The Wildlife Management Institute, a private organization, gave the Fish and Wildlife Service a $5000 plane last November to use in the poacher-infested Chesapeake Bay area.

Cold weather in January drove the birds farther south, and the plane extended its operations into the North Carolina marshes.

Within one week, says Thompson, three flying wardens captured 22 offenders. To date they have arrested some 50 hunters and trappers and have destroyed more than 150 traps.

"These lawbreakers kill from 5 to 10 ducks a day," says Thompson.

More Planes Needed

"WITH just six of these float planes, and two men to a plane, we could give pretty good coverage to the wintering marshes from Delaware all the way down to Brownsville, Tex.

"And we could save from 50,000 up to half a million ducks a year."

When two men in the plane sight a hunter, the plane lands as near as possible and one takes after the hunter on foot. The other returns to the air and circles the fleeing hunter to confuse him and to guide the pursuing officer.

"Sometimes the pilot lands again and runs after the hunter, and the other warden takes the plane up to give assistance from the air," Thompson says.

"Together they've run many a lawbreaker down like driving a rabbit into a bush."

The Skyland Stables, managed by Albert (Cowboy) Lewis, will be open on May 27.

Bus service by Virginia Trailways, under subcontract, begins May 1 and offers daily round-trip schedules between Washington and Charlottesville, Va., via the drive and points of interest in the park.

British Royalty Postpones Trips

London, April 3 (AP).—Official court sources say that all plans for future royal tours of the British Commonwealth have been shelved for the time being because of the nation's economic troubles.

The success of the South African trip early last year prompted suggestions that the royal family visit Australia and New Zealand in 1948. A Buckingham Palace spokesman said it was decided to wait for a more favorable time.

Earlier Princess Elizabeth announced that she and Prince Philip planned no travels abroad this year.

Too Many Deer

Pierre, S. Dak., April 3 (AP).—The employes of the South Dakota fish and wildlife service shortly will be afield with their rifles to bag up to 50 deer in the northeastern part of the State. Several deer have been found dead of starvation and the Game, Fish and Parks Commission has authorized the reduction of deer herds. The venison will be distributed among needy Indians.

Wright Way Marks Era in Private Flying

THE United States is busy these days putting up aerial "road signs."

A thousand freshly painted markers on rooftops and highways emblason Skyway No. 1 from Los Angeles to Washington, D. C. About 4000 more are needed to mark every community in a 40-mile-wide band along the 4100 miles of the forking route.

Underscoring a new era in private flying, Skyway No. 1 will be dedicated as "the Wright Way" at multiple exercises in cities of the route on April 24.

Aid to Airports

THE Wright Way is the first continuous contact-flying route in an envisioned national network to be gradually achieved through efforts of local airports and chambers of commerce. Its prime movers are the Washington Board of Trade and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Running east 1150 miles from Los Angeles to Abilene, Tex., the sky route touches Phoenix, Tucson and El Paso, winter season paradises of the Southwest. Eastward from Abilene, it branches into a 1440-mile northern lane, reaching Washington by way of Tulsa, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, and a 1510-mile southern route touching Shreveport, Atlanta, Greensboro and Richmond.

Part of the northern route—the 112 miles between Indianapolis and Dayton—was the first stretch marked for air travel in the country. Dayton, home of the Army Air Forces' vast Wright Field, was the home of pioneer experimentation by Wilbur and Orville Wright.

Of nearly 6000 airports and landing fields now counted by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, an estimated 1500 catering to private planes lies along or near the Wright Way. The country's airfields numbered only 1000 when Lindbergh hopped the Atlantic in 1927. Spurred by the Federal aid of the national airport program, approved in May, 1946, airports increased more than 1000 in 1947 alone.

Texas and California, with more than 400 airfields each, lead the States, followed by Florida and New York. Pennsylvania is in the van in air-marking its towns.

Second Skyway

NEW trends in flying fields include the airpark, pioneered at Eldon, Mo., with hotel, resort and service facilities for the flying family on vacation; the flightstop in open areas of the West, where service stations supply both planes and autos on cross-country trips, and farmers' and ranchers' air centers as at Davis, Calif., where air-minded farmers by the score visit University of California experimental farms.

Besides the current rapid increase in airfields catering to private planes, pilots and aircraft are also on the rise. There are nearly 100,000 registered aircraft available for the use of about 240,000 private and 200,000 commercial licensed pilots.

And to Skyway No. 1, add Skyway No. 11, recently designated by the CAA. From a northern terminal at Pembina, N. Dak., 60 miles south of Winnipeg, it runs southward to San Antonio, Tex. There it sends separate spurs on to the Mexico border—one to Brownsville, the other to Laredo.
